Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Co Portland, Oregon, overlooks few opportunities, but one of his late pe formances is especially worthy of note. C. Lawrence Fuller, of the Vit graph, was in his section booming the Vitagraph and he carried with him reel showing how the Vitagraph pictures are made. Some 10,000 perso saw the reel in Portland and in the People's house in La Grande, there we 1,500 at the show at which the reel was run and the lecture given. A r of tickets was sent the opposition house in La Grande that everyone mig come—and they did. We can imagine the feelings of the other manag who fed the People's show, but he could either give out the tickets an advertise the opposition or refuse and advertise the other house and his ow ill humor. He was game and gave out the tickets, which was a good thin for the People's and, in a way, for the opposition. The latter manager w whipsawed and he did the best he could. It was a shrewd move on Wi stock's part, but to be expected of a man who could coax the Governor the State into the house as an extra attraction and then get him to hel with a photoplay; the latter now being under the consideration of one the Licensed companies.

Changed to a Folder.

The Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City, has abandoned the weekly progra in favor of the twice-a-week folder of your pages, concerning which a sistant manager R. W. Midgley writes:

> We are now issuing a little folder. I am enclosing copies of the first two issues, which has, we believe, a greater advertising value than the program. We run our reels over a day or so before we show them, and thus are able to choose music to fit the pictures and incorporate the musical program in the folder. We get a thousand of the folders printed twice a week for $5 an issue and distribute them to the houses in different parts of the city on the day of the change of program. You will note that they are printed on good stock and stand a good chance of being read and, at a half a cent apiece, are much more valuable than newspaper space which is $1 per column-inch here.

An article in the February 24th World by G. W. Vail asks for musical programs, so I am enclosing a marked copy for this department, which I hope will become an established department, as we have realized from the beginning the importance of playing music suitable to the character of the scenes in the picture and take great pride in the success of our orchestra in this respect. We estimate that almost half of our patrons come to hear the music and consider the pictures of second importance. From the list which was published in the World we have selected four or five numbers which we shall add to our library as we think they will be just what we want for certain kinds of pictures, and we hope the lists we send will be as valuable to someone else.

Music Is Good, But—

We are not wholly in agreement with Mr. Midgley in his belief that half the people come to hear the music. Music is an attraction and the chestra can be made an important feature, but the pictures are the al feature and we believe that without the pictures it would be found at the supposedly musical half stayed away with the other picture lovers. ne program is above the ordinary and is given for the benefit of other anagements. It runs Overture, "Raymond," Thomas; "There Once Was n Owl," Herbert; "Au Revoir-Waltzes," Waldteufel; "The Pink Lady," election, Caryll; "The Oceana Roll," Lewis; "Martinique," Loraine; "Yesrthoughts," Herbert; "The Land of Romance," Hoschna; "Panamericana," erbert; "Ramshackle Rag," Snyder; "Charme d'Amour," Kendall; "Scarf ance," Chaminade; "I Love Thee," Grieg.

The folder is on good paper, well displayed and carries a condensed synops of the subjects for the half week. It is not as pretentious as an earlier ogram, but we are inclined to think it better advertising and much to be eferred to a small advertisement in the papers. The three big lines are Liberty," "Program" and "Tonight," the very three lines that should ive been brought up.

Boom the Making of Pictures.

Mr. Midgley also sends a one sheet flier of the Edison release "How otion Pictures are Made and Shown." This is an exceptionally fine treatent of an always popular subject and managers who get the reel can rouse terest and build business by making this a special feature. There is too uch mystery thrown about the making of a picture and anything that satised curiosity is worth booming. Very often you can make a feature of a el not directly advertised as such and get a larger return than you might unt upon if you will take the trouble to do a little extra work. Be on e watch for these unannounced specials and when they come make the most f them. They cost you nothing extra and they yield a good return for the vo or three dollars the extra advertising costs.

Another Musical Show.

The Orpheum Theater, St. Joseph, Mo., one of the Saxe Brothers' houses, cently gave a free concert from 11 to 12:30 Sunday morning. There is n organ and a twelve-piece orchestra attached to the house and the highrade program, with two vocal soloists, was one of real merit, including numers by MacDowell, Massanet, Saint Saens, Puccini, Theodore Bendix, erold and Gounod. It not only drew far more press work than the conert cost, but it established this house as the home of the worth while kind nd gave it a standing in the eyes of the amusement-seeking public that is ivaluable. It is work such as this that is raising the photoplay theater to s proper level and removing the mental association of the real house ith the store show of five years ago.

Special Mormon Advertising.

A Montreal exhibitor sends a special four sheet of "A Victim of the Iormons," printed in both English and French, by a local house for sale to xhibitors at from $3 to $1.60 a thousand, according to the quantity ordered, nd states that with this advertising he turned hundreds away at double rices. Three cuts are used together with a brief synopsis of the reels, an xtract from a New York daily and some rather lurid catchlines on the ront page. For a sensational reel the advertising seems to be in keeping, ut it is a little too loud for the general tone of photoplay advertising. The aper is useful only north of the line where American print is subject to eavy duty.

A Princess Folder.

The Princess Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, sends a folder made up in part om material printed in these columns but with some matter of its own harmony with the compilation. Only the inside is specially printed, the ont and back carrying a stock design from a company supplying the ade, the front cover being a sketch of a woman's head that is catchy nough to hold the attention past the turned page. The new material is assed on for the benefit of those who have a possible patronage not yet lucated to an appreciation of the pictures. It reads:

> PATRONS OF
> THE PRINCESS
> Have learned that it is neither disgraceful nor vulgar to be a picture fan.
> ¶ There is no other fad that is so clean, so healthful, so entertaining, so delightful, so inexpensive, as the moving picture fad, and it has no evil after effects.
> ¶ Every picture is censored. Each manufacturer is striving for superior quality, and the scenarios are selected with greatest care.
> ¶ The newest machines projecting the best possible picture. These all tend to make this the Ideal Entertainment.

Getting Them In.

Robert Codd, of the Western Amusement Company, South Bend, Ind., sends some samples of advertising with this statement:

> These envelopes are put in mail boxes and the city covered systematically. The returns have averaged about 25 per cent. of used tickets. They are made good for adults only as it is my purpose to handle the children in another way. Our object is to reach those who are not at present patrons and induce them to learn from personal visits what we have to offer. It is too early yet to state results. We use different circulars for our houses in South Bend (the Royal and American) and Mishawaka as the conditions are different. My own idea is that all advertising is good, but that some is more expensive than others when results are taken into consideration and, in a business in which the admission fee is small, this must be closely figured. I also believe that a system of advertising that builds for permanency is to be preferred to the circus style that attracts for but a day and on this argument I use the newspapers first and add such matter as this when I think it will bring results.

The circulars are well worded to attract, both starting with the same greeting, which is given below; but we think the circular used in South Bend tries to tell too much. It is better to use fifty words that will be read than five hundred that are not—and very few persons can be interested in the lengthy circular. Be brief and you'll be read, but too much is as bad as nothing at all. This paragraph, with a word about the location, should be sufficient for a starter and the second paragraph closes the argument well. Together, they are plenty enough. They read:

> We are enclosing these tickets in the hope that you will use them and come to know that the photoplays shown in the Princess Theater are of the highest class obtainable and delight refined and cultured people. The programs are carefully selected, including dramas, comedies, western, educational and religious subjects.
> We want you to spend your evenings with us and know that you will find enjoyment and pleasure in frequent visits to this cheery place of amusement.

ORMI HAWLEY.

Ormi Hawley is one of the beauties of the Lubin stock companies. She plays the juvenile and ingenue roles and is often recognized in the pictures as the rich merchant's daughter, or the beautiful society girl. She is always in love and the photo-stories make her come out all right in the end. She says she is fond of music, books and pictures. Especially the moving ones.

THE THANHOUSER "CARMEN."

Bert Adler phones The World that it shouldn't go to press this week minus mention of the Thanhouser "Carmen." This is a gigantic creation, the World is told, full of good photoplaying and good photography, and our critic is invited "in" to give his opinion. The Thanhouser Company, it is stated, will stand by that. In the meantime, we print the Thanhouser eight-word description of the subject:

"A Thanhouser Masterpiece, released shortly in two reels."

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Here Is a Meaty Letter.

As a subscriber to the Moving Picture World I have read with interest every one of your articles on scenario writing, and take pleasure in appending herewith a resumé of my experiences in the field for the benefit of anyone interested. I started writing scenarios about one year ago, being lead thereto by the alluring advertisements of a school professing to teach, for the sum of $15, any ignorant and unlettered person to write scenarios, claiming literary value is superfluous, the idea only being necessary. While this is no doubt to some extent true, doesn't it occur to you as extremely unlikely that such a person could invent an original plot, especially in these days when almost every conceivable arrangement of characters, plot and incident has been made for the cinematograph? While I am not exactly one of these aforementioned persons, at least my experience in the literary field, previous to my recent venture, had been nil, having hitherto followed, and am now following, the peaceful and steady-income-producing though not very remunerative profession of office clerk. Since my first attempt I have written about a dozen scenarios, but have only succeeded in selling one, and that contained an original idea furnished by the school. Have certainly tried very hard to sell, as I can prove by a stack of fifty or so of empty return envelopes that I am keeping as souvenirs

"The reason for failure in my case seems to have been not so much a lack of knowledge as regards technic and possibilities of the photoplay, as I have received several letters from manufacturers complimenting me on my style and method of presenting my subject, but rather to the lack of an original idea, that is, an idea that had never before been used in motion pictures. Would state that as a result of my experience, reading, and thought on the subject, I have come to the conclusion that any young, inexperienced person like myself who may have aspirations in the scenario writing field, must accept it as inevitable that his scenarios for the first year or two will come back to him with regularity, owing to the fact that his mind and imagination must first pass through the gamut of old and used ideas before being able to pass on to the more remote and hitherto unexplored regions of possibilities and combinations in human affairs. You must first capture the breastworks before you can assail the walls.

"My advice to any such aspirant is to read the stories of all the films released for a year back or more, see as many plays on the screen as possible, and constantly endeavor to keep abreast of the times in every line of human thought and endeavor. My experience has been that it is ten times harder to create original plots than it is to take a series of incidents and arrange them for presentation on the screen, which latter faculty is acquired almost unconsciously by frequent attendance at the picture show. Any further information that may be necessary can be obtained by writing to some of the more prominent manufacturers for their leaflets on the technic of the photoplay. It is however only fair to state that the director of the school in Chicago has shown me every attention and consideration and given me every assistance in his power, even to furnishing me with a valuable idea. The chief value of these courses then lies in the personal criticism and suggestions for change in arrangement of plot given by the schools, at least in the instance above mentioned.

"Chicago, Ill." "FRANK W. STANKE."

These are precisely the points we have maintained. The correspondence school course is valueless. Personal criticism may or may not help, but the man who cannot get his work in line with the aid of the leaflets furnished by the Lubin Company (not the correspondence course offered those who submit to the Lubin company, but the leaflet to be had for a two cent stamped and addressed envelope), Melies or Essanay, is not a competent person to write scenarios. The set of leaflets are to be had for twelve cents. Why pay for a correspondence course that usually is based on these leaflets? Here is corroborative evidence from "Spectator" of the Dramatic Mirror: "Any would-be scenario writer who cannot learn all that is necessary from reading the Mirror and other reputable periodicals is utterly hopeless as a scenario writer." Amen!

What Reliance Wants.

George W. Terwilliger, Editor for the Reliance Company, writes that he is out for the best in the market and that he wants to pay $50 and $75 for stories that are worth that much. He touches on one important point when he says: "I get about two hundred scenarios a week and I am mighty lucky if out of that number I get one that is usable. I think that most scenario writers must send their material to the licensed companies and then, when there is no other place left in that field, send them to the Independents." That's precisely what we think ourselves and we commend to experienced writers this further extract: "I want to get the best authors writing heavy dramatic material and we stand ready to pay as much, if not more, than other companies for first reading. Our lowest price will be $25 and we will pay up to $75 if the author has the goods." We have known Mr. Terwilliger for some fifteen years and if he says it, it's so. Try Reliance first. It will be worth while after the procession of $10 to $35 that most licensed companies think liberal.

A Matter of Form.

This quotation is published without credit at the request of its very modest author, but it comes from one whose success has been so pronounced that his opinions are more than ordinarily worthy of attention. We personally advise the short form because it is demanded by t studios and most writers must conform to studio rule if they wish f acceptances, but this writer points out the form in to which scenarios mu eventually come and he proves his point by the marked success attendin the production of photoplays from his very excellent scripts. Until dire tors are ready to accept the author generally as a co-laborer, the short for must be employed to cater to their decrees, but a few years from no this prediction will come true and this is a message to the scenario write to commence the study of the ample form now against the time when will be universally employed instead of sporadically as at present.

> I am speaking for the ultimate form. It is not going to be merely a series of groups of jerky phrases. It is not going to say, "Jones expresses fright," it is going to tell just the manner in which Jones expresses fright, because the writer, knowing just what kind of a person Jones is, will know how he will act when he is frightened—whether he will bolt, whether he will weakly plump down into a chair; whether he will use violent gesture; and so on.
> The properly prepared photoplay is not merely "a drama of action with the dialogue left out." In the regular drama, business is, as a rule, secondary to dialogue. In the photodrama, the reverse is necessarily the case. The ultimate photoplay will be prepared with an indication of action, successively, for the various characters, just as dialogue is indicated in the regular drama. It will be so prepared that the various parts can be handed to the actors for study.

The Deadly Parallel.

William H. Kitchell does the "Et tu Brutus" thing and pulls the deadl parallel on us by pointing out that in one issue we say that the averag contract writer is hard put to it in furnishing one good script a week t his studio and then later say that some journalists, despised by a Chicag correspondent, can turn out scrips in an hour. He wants us to reco cile the two statements. Most practised writers know that there are tim when they can do a lot of work and other times when they cannot. W pointed out that it was difficult to write 52 really good scripts each yea and we also pointed out that if a man can get $20 for an hour's wor "on the side," he'll take it, both of which statements are entirely correc We admire Mr. Kitchell, but we do wish he would fall off the water wago just once so he could take a human view of things. Bearing on th subject Emmett Campbell Hall writes that he has purchased a bu wagon with the proceeds of last year's scenario writing, which he di not need for living expenses. When we discuss situations in this colum we take notice of the rule, not of the exceptions. Mr. Hall is an exce tion as is Mr. Kitchell.

Use No Hooks.

We have dropped this head for a couple of weeks and we hoped might be kept in camphor for keeps, but there comes Lucien G. Lamber of New York, who writes:

> I just received a scenario from the Lubin Company that was covered with mud. I also sent them a return envelope, but this was not used; the office envelope being used and sent with postage due. I can take a joke, but when you consider that it was a new script and that it was completely spoiled, I think it has gone too far.

It Can't Be Done.

George F. Regan offers the suggestion that the Scenario Editor read th scenario first and the synopsis afterward. If Mr. Regan ever had trie to read two or three hundred scenarios a week while keeping from thr to ten directors supplied with scripts to write memoranda on, he woul know that it cannot be done. If the synopsis reads attractively the scenari will be read with care, but the synopsis is read first for the idea, becau it is the idea that is wanted—the idea that fits that particular studio. Ma your synopses sufficiently attractive and your scenarios will be read if th story is in the style adopted by that studio. Keep it as short as you ca but make it snappy and attractive.

Why Not?

We are publishing the appended because it is typical of many lette received. We do not get this sort of letter from men who write for living (we don't mean write scenarios for a living), because they ha "been through the mill" and are case hardened. We regret at times th the scenario form is so apparently simple that it tempts into the busine those who could not write a short story that would be acceptable to country weekly. The short story author serves an apprenticeship th develops more than merely the technique of words. He knows the rop and does not go up into the air over small matters that rouse the a tagonism of the scenario writer without this invaluable training. H knows how to develop a plot; he knows that a story may be good and y rejected; he knows that a story cannot be read the moment it is r ceived and he knows that he must cater to the tastes of the company which he makes submission. He knows because he has learned, slowly an painfully. Sometimes it is only a matter of months, but more often it a matter of years. The scenario business is only about three years o and few have gained this ripe experience.

Many releases are weak; weaker, perhaps, than those sent in by th author, but perhaps they are more practical, as well, and this is o point that may not be considered by the man who "dashes off" a script an then kicks because it is not taken.

And why kick against the necessity for sending stamps? If the i formation sought is not worth the 4 cents going and coming it is cents under Chuck Connor's contemptuous "t'irty cents" It's only cents to you, but it is ten or fifteen dollars a week to the manufacturer, to say nothing of the stationery, the time of the stenographer and the time of the person dictating. Be glad it costs but 2 cents to find out. This is the letter:

> It is with great interest that I read The Scenario Writer every week and there is no doubt but what your advice is of great help to all writers of scenarios. While I have had a few accepted, the greater share were returned (marked unavailable) and at the same time these different companies would release the weakest kind of a picture, one that I would be ashamed to submit to an editor.
> It is only a short time ago when some firms refused to consider any scenarios from the outside, but I notice nearly all are seeking them from any source now. I believe with Mr. E. C. Hall that anyone would be foolish to devote all his time to writing picture plots, for it is only now and then that one is accepted and the price paid is not worth while.
> I have managed several different theatres and during that time have handled the output of nearly all manufacturers, and I believe I am better able to judge what class of pictures take with the public than the scenario editor or the manufacturer, who possibly only see their own makes. They cannot judge a picture by its sale as most exchanges contract for all releases and the exhibitor has to take what is offered him or go without. As to forming a society of scenario writers I believe it would be of no value for you could not compel a manufacturer to buy of you, and then there are hundreds of people who would write for almost nothing just to see their ideas pictured. The picture manufacturer has met with such great success that he feels independent and if you want to speak to him it will cost you postage. If you want to know what he wants to buy, enclose stamps or he will not consider your letter at all. If you want to submit a plot for his approval, another stamp or you will never see the piece of paper you spend a dollar to have typewritten and three hours good sleep to finish and, if he wants to return it in a soiled condition or make you wait five or six weeks until he passes judgment, that is his privilege.

Some Good Advice.

Royal A. Baker, who signs himself "Member of the Michigan Authors' Association," sends in some practical advice. That part in reference to unloading on some company that buys one script is particularly apt. Don't spoil a possible market by sending in everything you ever wrote. Read Mr. Baker:

> My advice is, see your play clearly, then write it. When you see a dog hit by a street car, don't try to build a drama out of it, don't write ten scenarios a week, write a story when you get a good subject or an inspiration. It takes almost as much time to construct a photoplay as it does a drama, and every bit as much care. Just remember when constructing a picture that every scene is an act, make each act interesting. Don't write a letter telling the editor why he should buy it, or that you are starving to death. If you do, he'll see that you do starve. Here is my method: take some company, study their performers, learn the strength of their leads, what sort of play they are adapted for best, what kind of plays the companies mostly produce, where they are located and what scenery is available to them, then construct your play accordingly. Don't call for costly properties, create the power of scenes by situation. If you are going to use criminal action of any kind, have the law always take its proper course. Don't worry about your name being on the leader. Make your stories "make you;" they soon learn your value and you will be surprised what these same companies will pay you for certain class of work if it is what they want. When you happen to sell a script to a company, don't immediately dump all your rubbish upon them, send them a better one next time. If you find a script is not as strong as you thought it was going to be, just lay it away and write a new one. A few months later fish the old script out of its hiding place, read it and you will undoubtedly discover its weak spots. My final advice is—IF YOU ARE BADLY IN NEED OF MONEY—GO TO WORK.

INQUIRIES

WENDEL.—A plot that is merely based upon an old idea is your own if is no more than "based," but if it copies the arrangement of incident is quite another matter. See page 475 of the current volume for this atter in detail. If your plot is no more a plagiarism than the story you ite, you may sign the release slip with a clear conscience. The story, s you say, "is based on a vaudeville gag," but note that it is only based; hat the "gag" only serves to start the story. Thanks for the paragraph. e will use it next week. Come as often as you like.

N. D. S.—We always like to oblige anxious ladies. Biograph is at present working in Los Angeles. Vitagraph in New York and Los Angeles. ubin in Philadelphia, Jacksonville and various parts of Arizona. American t La Mesa, Calif. Selig mostly in Los Angeles. C. G. P. C. all over urope. Pathe in Jersey City Heights and Los Angeles. Essanay in Chiago and Los Angeles. Bison in Edendale, Los Angeles. The others are reign companies with several establishments, the Cines' headquarters eing in Rome.

A. G. L.—See above for most of the information you seek. Edison has western company. Imp and Vitagraph are in Los Angeles and the hanhouser has no western studio just now. Their field company is in lorida.

A. A.—It was Miss Dorothy Phillips who played opposite Francis Bushan in Essanay's "Fate's Funny Frolics." She is not now with that comany. We believe she is back on the dramatic stage.

RICHARD ROE.—Seems to be a survival of the fittest. (2) We do not back up" on players' records when they leave the Biograph Company and et their names back. (3) Naughty. This is not the joke column. (4) broad it is usual to refer to cinematography. Use your own judgment.) Write the company for this information. He is not a player.

J. A. M.—William Clifford has left the Nestor Company and is reported with the Western Lubin Company. Jesse Briscoe was the Doctor in "The Man from the Foothills." It was a Nestor film.

B. K. H.—Miss Ruth Roland was Ross in Kalem's Walk -you, walk? and in the same company's "Things Are Seldom What They Seem." Ed. Coxen was the cowboy lover and G. F. Binager the actor.

C. A. R.—Miss Flo LaBadie and Willia mRussell were the leads in Thanhouser's "The Trouble Maker," and in the same company's "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," James Cruze played the dual role.

H. K.—The Essanay Company is not certain but thinks that it was Baby Todd in "A Child of the West." The new Essanay western lead is pretty from the accounts of all who have seen her. We do not know why Miss Fisher left but personally we don't think we would let a stage coach fall over on us more than a couple of times before we took it as a sign to quit. Brinsley Shaw is the official villain for the western section of the company. He is no relation to Mr. Melford. Glad to contribute to your happiness.

MRS. H. C. T.—You are correct in your identification of the picture enclosed as that of Jack Richardson. This on the authority of the company. We believe that Mr. Moore is not at present affiliated with any company.

F. L. S.—We have no record of either the players you ask for. Many of the companies have post cards or photographs for sale. Inquire of the companies whose players you want. We know of no general company handling the photographs for sale.

A. F.—Application for positions should be made at the studio and not of the business office of the company, but since there are no vacancies and enormous waiting lists, why make the inquiry? You help the street car companies but that's all.

M. N. H.—If you'll send a stamped and addressed envelope we'll send you a list of addresses where scenarios may be and if you'll repeat the rest of the question then we'll add the information. The best way to keep in touch with production is to read the "Stories of the Films" in this paper each week.

A. B.—Albert McGovern is now a director with the Powers Company and does not appear in the pictures. He left the Lubin Company some time ago. Arthur Johnson is the principal leading man with the Lubin Company, but there are several, one for each company.

SUBSCRIBER.—The complete scenario is the synopsis or condensed plot of the photoplay; the scenario in which this plot is developed into action and divided into scenes, and the cast of characters. To explain fully will require too much space. Send to this office for a copy of Technique of the Photoplay, which covers the ground in a practical fashion.

ELIZABETH F.—It's a good plan to read this column whether you've asked a question or not. We've explained several times that the player you ask about is Miss Mary Pickford.

A. M. G.—No person or book can teach you scenario writing. Get a copy of Technique of the Photoplay to learn the groundwork. The rest will come with experience. Any school will give you the same information and charge a lot more. The only school is experience and this means writing the plays and studying them on the screen, but studying them doesn't mean just looking at them. Dig down below the picture and find the reasons.

F. J. S.—See N. D. S. for the first question. Miss Florence LaBadie was the Thanhouser Cinderella. We do not answer Biograph questions.

S. W.—Mr. Blackwell was formerly with the Vitagraph and might have played in U. T. C. We do not know about the Powers story.

G. T.—You seem to be misinformed as to the province of this column, which is to answer questions and not to start controversy or serve the purpose of the press agent.

A. C. S.—The Cines product is mostly produced in Rome, though it has other studios in various parts of Europe.

M. W. P.—There has been some talk of a permanent Lubin studio in the South, but the latest advice is to the effect that the comedy company will presently return to Philadelphia and later go to Atlantic City.

V. E. B.—There is so small a chance that you'll be able to get into a photoplay studio that we do not advise you to waste your time. The advertisement you enclosed is that of a school that teaches everything but how to obtain a position.

C. D. H.—Miss Mary Pickford and Owen Moore had the leads in Majestic's "Honor Thy Father."

D. B. A.—Some of the El Kalem en route stuff has already been released. The real photoplays will commence in May.

H. J. P.—Miss Pauline Bush was Dare Devil Ann in "Objection Overruled." She has the lead in most of the American productions.

W. R. A.—Miss Betty Harte and Herbert Rawlinson had the leads in Selig's "Making a Man of Him."

G. T. E.—Jack Hopkins was with Powers the last we heard. He has not been in the recent Lubin films because he has not been with the company. He was Jack in "Jack's Umbrella."

M. K.—Kalem made "Mrs. Simms Serves on the Jury" and the Vitagraph "The First Woman Jury in America." Which one do you mean? If you'll advise us we'll get busy. Always try and give title and company.

E. W. B.—Any scenario question will be answered here that does not involve the handling of manuscript.

BERNHARDT EXCLUSIVELY WITH SOCIETY FILM D'ART.

Reports that Madame Sarah Bernhardt had been secured to pose for other picture firms than the Society Film d'Art, which made the "Camille" pictures, have met with a prompt denial from Madame Bernhardt herself, in a letter to the French-American Film Company, of New York, which is distributing the "Camille" and "Sans Gene" pictures in America. The letter reads as follows:

"Paris, March 2, 1912.

"French-American Film Company, New York:

"Gentlemen—I have not posed nor contracted to pose for any motion pictures whatever except with the Film d'Art Company, of Paris, for whom I have already done 'Camille' as a photoplay, the North American rights of which are exclusively controlled by the French-American Film Company, of New York. My contract with the Film d'Art Company covers my every appearance for motion pictures. Sincerely yours,

"(Signed) Sarah Bernhardt."

"SEVEN BARS OF GOLD" (Melies), March 7. The men who brought the gold to the express office wanted to steal one of them. To do this they had to get the man out of the way, so they accused him of stealing it. There's a race between the sheriff on horseback to get the man and his friends on a hand car to save him. The pivotal character in the picture is the girl, daughter of the schemer and the express agent's sweetheart. It is an ordinary picture, fairly interesting, and well photographed. It will serve as a fair filler.

"THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN" (Selig), March 7.—This picture shows a very good wrestling match which is excellently photographed. It is a love and friendship story, but we don't see where the brotherhood comes in. It shows how the winner of the match went into it to help along his old trainer, who needed money. The story, as conducted, is unusually weak. We fear to begin criticising it, but the match is fine, is one of the best contests we have ever seen and, because of this, we heartily commend the picture. It is clean and wholesome and will serve very well as a drawing feature in the right locality on account of the wrestling match solely.

"A STRING OF PEARLS" (Biograph), March 7.—A picture of contrasts whose purpose seems to be to show something of how a tenement house is organized on its human side. What we mean will be much clearer to those who see the picture. Life is an organism; we are in truth one. All of us can see ourselves in others; even the rich man of the picture, the man who paid a quarter of a million for the string of pearls, could do that. He said, "I have worked for my money, let them do so." On the other hand, it needs some humanizing experience to make us recognize others in ourselves, to make us sympathetic. Hard luck is very apt to do this. That is why the poor are charitable to the poor. It was on the thread of human sympathy that the spiritual pearls of the tenement were strung. The picture shows these in contrast with the material pearls owned by the rich man's wife. The connection between these poor people and the rich man is in that he is their employer. The scenes keep changing from the one to the other. The picture tells an interesting but very slight story. It is a suggestive picture; it is meant to stimulate thought, and on that account it may seem slow to many, although three or four characterizations among the poor people keep it very much alive. It is, in fact, a modern interpretation of the parable of Dives. We fear to wholly commend it to exhibitors as a sure, drawing feature; but to spectators we most heartily commend it as a big, worthy picture, one well worth going some distance to see. The photographs are fine.

"THE FACTORY GIRL" (Eclipse), March 6.—An unusually beautiful picture telling a very wholesome, pretty love story in which the factory girl, a painter of fashion plates it seems, is discharged because the owner's son has fallen in love with her. It is a pleasing variant from an old, but ever interesting story. Its quality comes from the acting of the noted players from the great Parisian theaters who interpret it and from its quiet, natural conduct. The settings are perfectly in accord with the theme, being, it seems, real factory views and tasteful, rich interiors of the wealthy owner's home. Many of the photographs are as pretty as paintings. It is a very sure feature picture.

"IRENE'S INFATUATION" (Vitagraph), March 6.—Watching this very satisfying picture, the reviewer felt that there could hardly be a better comedy. It is the kind that keeps the audience not roaring, but ripling with heart-warming amusement. It is a picture for every audience and all audiences; indeed, it will be a pity if any one misses it.

The story is not original, it being a little classic of American humor, but it is wholly fresh and besides, probably ninety-nine per cent of spectators have never heard of it. It is the story of the girl who was so infatuated with a great singer that she took a job as maid under his wife in order to be near that beautiful voice. She ended by pouring a basin of hot water over the pampered one, whose artistic soul is apparent in all his actions.

Mr. John Bunny plays the role of Senor Paccalaipani and Miss Flora Finch, his wife. Both impersonations are quite new. They are so fine that one needn't hesitate in calling them a public benefaction. Miss Lilian Walker plays Irene and Miss Rosemary Theby plays her friend, a lesser part. Both do good, natural work. The picture, on every possible count, is worth all we could possibly say about it. We can add no more. It will win its own fame with those who see it.

"MOTHER LOVE" (Lubin), March 9.—A very commendable picture with an idea. To put it crudely, it is this—it takes a pull at a mother's heart strings to make her understand the heart of motherhood in another woman. The lead in this very well composed and suggestive picture is taken by Miss May Buckley as the young widow, who marries again and is jealous of her new mother-in-law's place in the heart of her husband; but mother-in-law rises equal to the occasion and wins the younger woman's affection in the end. The scenario is commendable in that it handles a rather artificial train of circumstances in a very human way, affording the players chances to put excellent things into their interpretation of the situation. Moreover, it keeps clear a plot that has to express a rather complicated idea. We can safely call this well acted and well photographed picture a good feature, because of the good things in it.

"A SPARTAN MOTHER" (Kalem), March 11.—A war-time story of a brave Southern mother. The picture has a glorious idea; but it lacks something to make it convincing, something that it should have had and that most Kalem pictures have had. There is in it what is probably the most thrilling battle scene yet produced, with three or four exceptions, one of which was in a former Kalem. The photographs are good. It may serve as a feature, especially in the South, but we can't call it a very strong picture.

"THE POISON CUP" (C. G. P. C.), March 12.—Simply a fairy story told clearly and smoothly. It didn't call for emotional acting; but it is very prettily posed in well-made, romantic settings and the audience liked it. Graceful, light pictures, such as this, are very welcome in relieving a program that is a little heavy. There is nothing but entertainment in this picture.

"THE RELL BROTHERS" (C. G. P. C.), March 12.—This acrobatic company of two men is worth seeing and the picture is well placed on the same reel with the above fairy story. The photographs of both are very good.

"THE BABY" (Edison), March 12.—A story of London on New Years night, and dealing mostly with costermongers and their like. There's an English gentleman in the picture who is a sort of Van Bibber and a kind of fairy godfather to the story. It is a good natured and quite human comedy. The scenes, some of them surely, were taken in England and all are fresh and interesting. There are many good laughs in the picture and they come spontaneously at the right moments. It is a first class comedy feature, clearly told and well photographed.

"THE RANCH WIDOWER'S DAUGHTERS" (Essanay), March 12.—A good Western laugh-maker. The widower had nine daughters; six old enough to have beaus. Dad didn't want any lovers around; but one afternoon the crop of spooning couples on his ranch was bigger almost than he could handle. The picture ends in a wholesale elopement with Alkali Ike in difficulties as usual, but even Ike comes out all right in the very end. The spectators seemed to like it very much indeed. The photographs are fair.

"THE FIVE SENSES" (Vitagraph), March 12.—Five little comedy sketches, five little humorous comments on life, played by Mr. Marshal Wilder. The pictures are mordant enough to be interesting as well as amusing and are very likable.

"XENOPHON, A STORY OF THE CIRCUS" (Vitagraph), March 12.—On the same reel is this pathetic story of Xenophon, the little elephant and the clown's son, his friend (played by Keneth Casey). Mr. Tom Powers plays the boy's father a trapeze artist and Rose Tapley plays the boy's mother. The picture's point is the interest that Xenophon takes in his little friend when he is sick from injuries due to a fall. The picture does not convince powerfully and is emotionally effective only at moments; but the spectators seemed to like it. The intelligent elephant gives much interest to it. It is very well photographed in most scenes and will make a desirable filler.

"BOUNDER" (Selig), March 12.—"Bounder" is a tame mountain lion who saves his mistress from a Mexican villain and does other remarkable but very convincing things in this picture. The story is high strung and unusually absorbing from start to finish and is the biggest thriller in a long time. The spectators were markedly enthusiastic. When it was ended some shouted above the applause, "Selig!" He read the name from the screen and there was that in his voice and manner that left no doubt that he was unconscious and sincere. That man will be looking for other Seligs on bill posters and programs. The photographs are very good, although just a bit misty. A big picture from the producer's and from the spectator's view points.

"GETTING A HIRED GIRL" (Essanay), March 7.—The domestic help problem is certainly a vital one, if the conversation we overhear are not all humor. This very amusing farce burlesques the situation; but one watching it feels that the producer has chosen a solid case of truth on which to wind his thread of laughter-making incidents. The picture seemed to tickle a large part of the audience and we feel safe in commending it highly The photographs are very good.

"MY PRINCESS" (Lubin), March 6.—A very pleasing romantic comedy in a vein that the Lubin premier company has worked with much success before. In this well conducted little love story, Mr. Arthur Johnson plays the leading role, a young bachelor who falls in love with a young lady (we believe that she is played by Miss Helen Marten and like the part very much). This lady is looking for a position as governess. The man, of course has no children; but borrows three from his washerwoman. They are nice children and all goes well until the governess returns unexpectedly and finds him paying them off. The ending might have been approached more freshly, indeed, the obvious, simpler path would have been more pleasing The photographs are simply perfect in most scenes, and some of them are like paintings. We call it a fair feature.

"THE BABY OF THE BOARDING HOUSE" (Essanay), March 8.—A farce picture very conventional as to form and style. The photographs are good. It is a filler.

"TROMBONE TOMMY" (Essanay), March 8.—A fantastic farce with a windy trombone that can even blow the painted music notes off a signboard. We have had others very much like it.

"HOW STATES ARE MADE" (Vitagraph), March 8.—An epic picture giving an episode which, of course, is fictitious, but which is set in a rea historic incident; viz.: the race of new homesteaders to occupy sections in a newly opened tract of public land. It shows the nondescript collection of eager adventurers in their dash for new farms. The soldiers line them up at the starting line. The gun is fired and they are off. First come, first served, and the fleetest gets the best. This picture is more important than any picture of a battle, and the Vitagraph Company deserves great credit for getting it or, if it was staged, which seems almost impossible, for making it. The picture was received everywhere with marked enthusiasm. It is one of the week's surest features. The photographs are good.

"THE HANDICAP" (Lubin), March 7.—A horserace story very much like others of its kind, but not equal to the best of them. There are in it the villain who owns the home, the heroine with her mother and brother (they are behind with the rent), the noble horse and the coming race. The villain has the water drugged, the brother is not in condition to ride at the critical moment so the girl mounts and rides to victory, discrediting the villain. It is too slow for such a picture. The backgrounds are in southern California. The photographs are good, but the scenes rather commonplace. It is a filler.

"THE HEIR APPARENT" (Edison), March 8.—An elaborate and very well made romantic picture which the spectators seemed to like. When the Edison starts out to do a thing like this, it usually finishes the picture properly and seemingly regardless of expense. It is so in this case. The idea might have come from a serial of a couple of years ago in "The Ladies' Home Journal," called "Princess Virginia," but the filling-in is different and the picture is new and very acceptable. The work of Mr. Mark MacDermott, as the old king, father of the heir apparent, is fine; it is quite the best thing in a very well-acted and well-conducted picture. As a whole, the picture is very successful in creating a romantic impression, and from the exhibitor's viewpoint is an unusually desirable feature picture.

"WIFEY'S MA COMES BACK" (Lubin), March 11.—A farce with an invalid mother-in-law and a pugilistic young man. Mother didn't want to go into training; son-in-law didn't intend that she should want to nor that her visit should be over pleasant; but mother's health and muscle improved and the young man got several amusing falls. It made a good sized audience laugh and seemed to please it. It is rough in places, never vulgar.

"TOUGH GUY, LEVI" (Lubin), March 11.—The Yeddisher peddler and bandit story with a new twist. The photographs of both farces are very good and both made the audience laugh. The release is a first class filler.

"CAPTAIN RIVERA'S REWARD" (Kalem), March 8.—An interesting, but somewhat conventional, picture of the old viceroy days of California. The hero is the lover of the viceroy's daughter and she was his reward. His luck came from a kindness done to a boy of the people; for when bandits had captured him, after an ambush and fusilade, the boy's mother helped the viceroy's daughter to save him. The backgrounds are glorious mountains and tropic gardens, and an interesting wayside shrine. The action does not drag; but is not very significant, nor does it require acting. The photographs are fair. A fair filler.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 11" (March 4).—An interesting number; its best items are breaking a path through the ice-bound Hudson, near Tarrytown, N. Y., and the Kaiser's review of his troops on the 200 anniversary of the birth of Frederick II.

"CHOLERA ON THE PLAINS" (Pathe), March 6.—An Indian picture in which white people, dying of cholera in this prairie schooner, send their little daughter to the Indians. This girl finds a friend in the chief's little son. The story is not without interest; but lacks vital strength, does not convince us powerfully. The photographs are good; but the backgrounds are commonplace. It will make a very fair filler.

"A CRUCIAL TEST" (Selig), March 11.—A picture with two distinct halves, like two stories, both dealing with the same leading characters. The first half, a story of adventure in Alaskan mountains in winter, dragged. The second half was much more interesting. This part concerned itself with the two mining partners after their gold mine had been sold. The setting is in civilization. One miner had supposed his partner dead and had sold the claim. The partner hearing of it thought he had been defrauded wilfully; but found that he was mistaken. The photographs are poor. The picture is entertaining; but lacks individual, distinctive quality. It is a good filler.

"HYPNOTIZED" (Selig), March 8.—A farce comedy remarkable chiefly as showing the hardiness of one of Selig Company's athletic players. He didn't believe the "professor" could hypnotize him. The professor showed him. The scenes that follow are mostly taken out of doors in winter. The audience seemed to enjoy the picture and to be amused. The photographs are fair.

"AN EPISODE OF THE HUNDRED YEARS' WAR" (C. G. P. C.), March 8.—A very interesting and elaborate historical drama. The episode is the attack of the English upon Cresy and the disastrous attempt of the French king to relieve the city which was strongly built to withstand assaults, but was being starved out. A great number of players take part in the picture which very adequately suggests to us a great conflict between two strong forces with the utter defeat and stampede of one. There is no love story told, the picture is intended solely to be an impressive, educational spectacle. It is finely colored. The costumes and armor are interesting. It will make a very sure feature picture.

"SMALL TRADES IN HAVANA" (Pathe), March 8.—A very short, but interesting glimpse of street life in the Cuban capital. These are very commendable and seemed to be liked by the spectators.

"HOW THE PLAY WAS ADVERTISED" (Pathe), March 9.—A comedy of theatrical life. The press agent hired two innocent thespians to "hold up" the automobile of the leading lady and "steal" her jewels. She was delayed and another lady got held up. Amusing complications arose. The spectators watched the picture closely and got a good measure of amusement from it. It is rather artificial, but has some freshness and, at times, was greeted with spontaneous laughter. The photographs are good. It is a good filler.

"THE NEW YORK POULTRY, PIGEON AND PET SHOW" (Edison), March 9.—This is a collection of photographs of prize winning roosters, chickens, turkeys, geese, cats, guinea pigs, etc., at the recent show of the Association held in Madison Square Garden. It is a very interesting picture and the people liked it very much. One doesn't need to be a fancier to be pleased by good photographs, such as these are of such fine birds and such magnificent cats.

"THE PATENT HOUSEKEEPER" (Edison), March 9.—This little fairy story of modern life or day dream of some perplexed housekeeper is on the same reel with the above. It is a well made and amusing trick film, and brought out a good, hearty laugh. A very desirable filler.

"A ROMANCE OF THE WEST" (Essanay), March 9.—One of the most effective pictures of out-of-door life (which we sometimes refer to as "Westerns") that has appeared in some time. There is a boundary discussion between a widow and her neighbor. The man, attempting to take the law into his own hands, is pulling down the widow's barn. She fires at him, but misses and wounds her own little girl. At this point the man's humanity softens his attitude and the two neighbors become the best of friends. It is a very emotional, dramatic picture, the kind that human beings like and it was warmly received.

"THE MOORISH BRIDE" (Cines), March 9.—A picture in Spain at a period when Moorish inhabitants had not yet been thoroughly subdued. It is a romantic love story, very well set and told fairly clearly. It is the best Cines for some time. The scenes and backgrounds are interesting. A desirable filler.

"A SPANISH DILEMMA" (Biograph), March 11.—A bright farce in which two brothers love the same girl. She finds it hard to decide and for some time they can find no solution to their dilemma. The acting is very good indeed. The photographs of sub-tropical gardens full of flowers are excellent. The spectators laughed and seemed to be enjoying it very much.

"THE ENGAGEMENT" (Biograph), March 11.—On the same reel with the above is this farce comedy which is a sure laugh maker. The youth had procured the ring on the installment plan. The jealous rival found this out and made much trouble; but fate took a hand in the game herself and the ring was paid for. The photographs are good. These two offerings on the same reel will serve as the feature on most occasions. They will probably be acceptable for all classes of entertainments.

Independent.

"BATTLE OF THE REDMEN" (Bison-101), March 8.—A great feature film in two reels along the line of this company's former two-reel Western epic dramas. The "Battle of the Redmen" takes place between Sioux and Cheyennes. It is a picture of real war, full of big action and very impressive, and is wholly an Indian picture; no white people appear in it. In its treatment of its subject and in its showing the great incompatibles, love and war, contending on the same stage, it is truly epical. It has much of the same quality as the story of Samson and of the sack of Troy. It is well photographed and makes a truly magnificent release.

"FOR HER SAKE" (Great Northern), March 9.—In this picture's story a little matrimonial tangle is straightened out by a mother's love for her little girl. She is saved by the child from the love of a man who was not her husband. The story is very dramatic and intense. It is well acted and skilfully put on in every way. Many of the scenes have much beauty pictorially. It is a substantial offering and will be an excellent program filler.

"THE RULING PASSION" (Reliance), March 13.—Mr. Walthall plays in this picture the role of an old musician whose daughter married against his wishes. They were separated and the daughter had become a widow. In poverty, the two are brought together again through the little granddaughter's love for music, the "ruling passion." It is an emotional picture of sentiment in kind like "The Music Master." Mr. Walthall is very ably supported and the picture is effective and will be liked. It is well photographed and will be a good feature.

"BEDELIA'S 'AT HOME'" (Reliance), March 16.—Bedelia, who lately was a cook, is now a mistress and her home is cleaned up for a reception. The guests arrive; but Bedelia's husband, who is at his horsey club, sends an excuse. The picture, which is a very amusing burlesque, is carried by the queer characters, both at the club and at the house. It is, in part, a very funny picture. Perhaps not quite a feature for cultivated audiences who may prefer more substantial pictures; but it will make a laughter-causing filler.

"NATURAL HISTORY SERIES" (Reliance), March 16.—This on the same reel and opens with 'gators, hundreds of 'em and all ages, running from a few days to several hundreds of years old. It is short, but interesting.

"THE ANIMATED BATHTUB" (Solax) March 8.—The animated tub is an invention for the convenience of home life; the tub will come to the bather at will. He will only need to press a button and it enters the room. The trouble was it came at call, whether anyone was in it or not. The inventor (Billy Quirk) called for it to come to the parlor to show it to some friends. His rich uncle was in it at the time, but it came. The idea is very funny and brought out a good laugh. The photographs are fine.

"GARDEN OF THE GODS" (Solax), March 8.—This travel picture on the same film with the above farce shows this often pictured pleasure country with a light snow on the ground. Some of its views are very lovely. The photographs are good. This split reel makes a desirable filler.

"FALLING LEAVES" (Solax), March 15.—"Falling Leaves" as a title suggests a picture of sentiment in which consumption figures, put out by a French film maker last summer. This picture may have been suggested by that, but it has freshness although there are many points of similarity. Mace Greenleaf plays in it the role of a doctor who has discovered a cure for consumption. Blanche Cornwall plays a mother whose daughter (Marion Swayne) is in a decline. The Solax Kid plays the little boy who ties the leaves on to the trees as in the old story. If the story has been told before, it is here well told again and prettily acted. It is a picture of sentiment and of a kind that is always popular. For this reason we call it a feature. It is prettily set, lighted and photographed.

"THE KODAC CONTEST" (Eclair), March 14.—A prize was offered for the funniest photograph. One competitor got an amusing snapshot of a man; some one else got an amusing shot of a lady. These happened to be man and wife. Each sees the other's picture in the paper, not their own and there is a sad misunderstanding which is explained in time. The picture has not much that is fresh. The photographs are fair. It will serve as a filler.

"SHRINER'S PARADE" (Eclair), March 14.—This, on the same reel, seems to be the picture of an elaborate ceremony and parade. It is unusually interesting. Together, these two pictures will make a desirable filler; its interest lies largely in this latter topical.

"A TIMELY REPENTANCE" (Imp), March 11.—This picture, played very well by three people, shows the good influence of an Imp picture, an old film, in which Mary Pickford appears and which is called in this release, "The Wife's Desertion." In the early scenes of this picture, the poor man's wife (Miss Young) has deserted him for a second man (Mr. Shay). Eloping, their automobile breaks down and they go in to see the picture. It causes the wife's "timely repentence." Mr. Le Saint plays the poor man. The photographhy is very good in most scenes, but the tinting in one or two scenes does not seem so successful. The picture will make a very good filler.

"SHAMUS O'BRIEN" (Imp), March 14.—See page 878 of March 9, 1912. It's an Irish love story of the days when the best of Ireland's boys were "rebels," and "the bravest and hardiest lad of them all was Shamus O'Brien, of the town of Glengal." And, Mr. Exhibitor, if you want a heart-stirring story about him, here it is, in two reels. The first shows his capture; the second shows how his friends planned to free him and succeeded in getting him to the "Land of the Free."

"THE UNKNOWN MODEL" (Nestor), March 16.—Miss Josephine Ricketts and Mr. Henry Otto lead in this picture in the roles of a young married couple. It is a very clever and also a fresh comedy quite laughable. The husband wanted to get his wife a new dress for a birthday present to be a surprise. It certainly tickled the audience. A good comedy picture.

"WILLY'S FIRST CIGAR" (Eclair), March 17.—A very laughable little comedy made by the French company. Little Willy is a very good actor. It is wholly commendable.

"THE CHAMPION OF THE WORLD" (Eclair), March 16.—On the same reel is this farce in which Gontran, the burlesque character who has been amusing us in former Eclair pictures, desires to become the world champion pugilist. Gontran, in this picture, isn't very courageous, but then neither is his dark skinned opponent. It is very fair. The photographs of both are good.

"FLYING TO FORTUNE" (Thanhouser), March 12.—A picture in very pretty Florida backgrounds, including sea scenes with a wide, flat beach and white breakers. The heroine (Miss Le Badie) is rescued by an aviator in his flying machine from a predicament into which her scheming aunt (Miss Snow) had placed her. While the story doesn't very strongly convince, its acting, and its scenes and the whole conduct of the picture are very pleasing and the release "gets over" very well as entertainment. Mr. Cruze plays the heroine's sweetheart. It makes a good filler.

"AFTER SCHOOL" (American), March 11.—Simple life on a farm is the background of this picture in which sacrifice on the part of an elder sister for the younger fails to accomplish the result that she purposed. She, for a time, even discouraged the schoolteacher whom she loved, because the younger sister thought that she should have him and said so. The schoolteacher, however, wins the bride of his choice. The story is very melodramatic and is not very fresh. The photographs are not all clear. The acting, however, in some of the scenes, gives the picture an interest that the plot does not give. It will be acceptable as a filler.

"VILLAGE RIVALS" (Nestor), March 9.—Jim and Dave were the village rivals. Whatever one was getting the other wanted. Dave was the friend of the village poet and in their love affair he helped him so much that it was Dave who came out ahead. It is a brisk farce comedy. Well acted, well photographed and pleasing. It makes, with its clever subtitles, a desirable filler.

"ARIZONA—THE NEW STATE" (Nestor), March 9.—A picture of the grand Canyon of the Colorado. The photographs are very fair.

"THE UNWILLING BIGAMIST" (Majestic), March 12.—Jones and Smith (both played by Herbert Prior) look exactly alike and both have wives. Jones gets hurt. Mrs. Smith comes to the hospital and insists on having him brought home, in spite of his vehement protests. Mrs. Jones also sees his photograph and comes to the hospital, but too late. The situation is worked out very well indeed and makes a most delightful farce. The photographs are very fair. We can safely place it among the feature pictures.

"THE POACHER" (Thanhouser), March 15.—A very pretty picture set supposedly on a big English estate. The plot is very slight. The magistrate had committed a poacher, but this man had broken from the county jail. The magistrate's little boy (the Thanhouser Kid) wanders away and becomes lost. It is in the depth of winter. The poacher risks his liberty to bring the boy back to his father, and is forgiven. The picture stands by its pretty snow scenes and by the Thanhouser Kid's acting, which is very popular. The photographs are very good. It will make a desirable filler.

"THOMAS CHATTERTON" (Ambrosio), March 13.—A romantic, tragic picture of a poet whose very name has become intimately associated with genius in distress. He is the representative of men of talent, who have succumbed to poverty and distress. It is not a great picture, but it has much in it that is beautiful. We enjoyed it and the audience also seemed to. It will make a desirable filler.

"BRIDGE" (Eclair), March 12.—A picture of society gambling in which the wife of a young business man loses at bridge whist more than she could afford and then loses some more. She has to give her necklace of pearls as a pledge for a loan from a young man. She escapes from the difficulty only by a narrow margin. The picture has a measure of freshness; it is very competently acted and the sets and photographs are very good. It will serve as a desirable filler.

"THE FATAL GLASS" (Champion), March 11.—The fatal glass held a drink of whiskey. A man drank of it and threatened his employer who chanced to commit suicide. The man went to prison for murder. The picture has minor defects, but it is sensibly conducted and well acted; also the photographs and scenes are interesting. The story is wholesome in it sentiment, but it isn't really strong. We dare not call it a feature an there are some better pictures among this week's good fillers, but the pictur is very fair and will be liked.

"THE EDITOR" (Champion), March 13.—The things in this pictur that really matter are true enough, but the string that holds them together is not strong. It is a picture of politics in any corrupt localit and has a socialistic drift, but a socialism that is pleasant and human. I substance, it shows how a girl of the right sort woke up a town and pu life and courage into a rather weak police commissioner. The acting i very pleasing, especially that of the heroine. The conduct of the pictur is commendable. The idea it expresses gives the story freshness, humanity and some strength. This picture will be liked very much. We commen it as a first-class feature, although it is not a great work of art.

"A BAD INVESTMENT?" (American), March 14.—A very amusing story, which, by the way, has been going the rounds of the newspapers furnishes this picture. It is a clever, breezy story and, as worked out makes an interesting picture. The father made fun of the son for buying a fake mine, but the son knew that he had resold it to his father for more than it cost him. A good love story has been woven in. The picture's quality comes from the acting. Miss Bush, Mr. Kerrigan, with the usual "Flying A" support, play the picture. It is a good filler. The photographs are good.

"THE POWER BEHIND THE THRONE" (Powers), March 12.—We have already commended this picture which gives spectators throughout the country an opportunity to see Mildred Holland in her big success, "The Power Behind the Throne." Her acting alone would make the picture worth while. It is a big offering. It is in two reels.

"THE REVELATION" (Nestor), March 11.—See page 876 of March 9, 1912.

"THE FIGHTING CHANCE" (Nestor), March 13.—See page 876 of March 19, 1912.

"A BOARDING HOUSE HEIRESS" (Solax), March 13.—Fanny Simpson plays in this farce the delightful part of a sloppy old maid, who makes emphatic love to a young man in the boarding house (played by Mr. Karr). She is the "heiress," or is made to seem so, by the young man, who wants to cut out a fellow boarder (played by Mr. Quirk), he, himself, being in love with the boarding house beauty (Marion Swayne). The farce doesn't drag any. The photographs are good. It is a good filler. In some places it will be very much liked.

"ARABELLA JOINS THE S. P. C. A." (Lux), March 15.—We have been seeing Arabella of late in the very amusing role of Skivvy. She is a clever comedienne and, in this cruelty to animals picture, she is also entertaining. She was certainly a surprise to the poor dumb creatures she helped. The old cab horse looked very much surprised to find himself in her parlor. It fills about one-half reel. The photographs are good.

"BILL HAS OWN BACK" (Lux), March 15.—Bill is the footman in a hotel and gets the sack at the same time with the housemaid. They plan to get revenge. In disguise they get their old jobs back and set traps to scare the household. It doesn't drag. The photographs are fair.

BUSINESS BOOMING.

The Mortimer Film Cleaner Company report the largest business in their history, and in order to better accommodate their rapidly increasing business have been obliged to secure new shipping accommodations. This machine has certainly come to stay, and is making good from one end of the continent to the other.

ALASKA DOGS IN ESSANAY PICTURES.

In Essanay's thrilling tragedy of the far North woods, "At the End of the Trail," booked for release March 28th, two full teams of Alaska "malamuts," or "mush" dogs, are used. The dogs are genuine, coming from Cape Nome, Alaska, and are perfectly at home in a sensational pursuit over ice and snow that culminates in a death struggle between two bitter enemies. Francis X. Bushman, leading man of the Essanay Eastern stock company, gives a most marvelous impersonation of Tukish, a half-breed Indian of the North, and his make-up is remarkable, as may be seen from the cut elsewhere in these pages.

FICHTENBERG TO BUILD NEW THEATER.

Herman Fichtenberg, the motion picture mogul of New Orleans, La., has leased a large plot of ground on Canal Street, between the Maison Blanche and Audobon buildings, upon which he will build a motion picture theater of the highest class. The building will be 50 feet by 143 feet and of fire-proof construction. The exterior design will be Italian and an elaborate scheme for the interior decoration has been adopted. The cost is estimated at $100,000. One of the features will be a $5,000 pipe organ.

Mr. Fichtenberg also owns and operates the Isis Theater, Houston, Texas; the Alamo, Vicksburg, Miss., and the Dream World, Picto and Alamo theaters in New Orleans. Independent service will be used in the new house.

COMMUTATORS.—California (name of town suppressed), writes: "In 'More About Commutators,' issue of February 24, Chicago is correct in saying that the most important thing is to keep the commutator clean. I have used just enough vaseline to color a rag and then immediately wiped it off. If a hard brush is used it will tend to make a grating noise which is quite noticeable on large machines. To relieve this, some operators boil the brushes in oil and then thoroughly drain before using. If before you 'sand' a commutator you rub the sand paper lightly with paraffine it will collect the copper dust. I do not agree with the editor when he says that sanding the commutator of a motor is not practical. Run the motor without load and, using the block spoken of, bear lightly on the commutator. A slight crackling or flash will warn you when to change sheets of sandpaper. I have paraffined several sheets and fastened them to the block, tearing them off as they became loaded with copper. Keep hands and face protected while doing this job. Wipe off the commutator and bearing surface of the brushes when through, and examine to see if any copper has been dragged across the mica, thus 'shorting' two adjacent bars.

"I would not advise a green man to attempt this job, but it is safe enough for a man who knows what he is doing."

If I am wrong in assuming the grinding of motor commutators to be impractical I stand corrected. I should imagine it would be a pretty risky operation, however, for several reasons. That paraffine-on-the-sandpaper sounds very good indeed.

And now I want to call attention to the many really valuable things the simple question concerning commutators, propounded by New York, has brought out. I very much doubt that there is a man who has read the various letters and comments who has not learned something he did not know before. I am not saying this as a boast, but to call attention to the fact that the surface is as yet only scratched and that this department has a still greater work to perform. How quickly that work will be done will in great measure depend on the extent of co-operation I have from managers and operators in setting forth such things as they believe to be of value to others. The day of the real, high class photoplay, at largely increased admission prices, is fast approaching. The producers, both Licensed and Independent, are doing their part, and their product will continue to steadily improve. It is up to the operator to keep pace, but he is still far behind the procession. I have no fault to find with the co-operation I have had in the past. It has been splendid. Now let us all pull together for the future and get in a position to say to Mr. Producer: "Bring on your perfect films. We are ready to project them in a manner befitting their excellence." To the machine manufacturer: "Give us the high class mechanism—we know how to handle it."

The Editor is not seeking bouquets from managers or operators. He is, however, seeking every possible bit of information which will tend to elevate projection, thus helping to lift the motion picture theater out of the nickel class, boosting it up to a possible fifty-cent admission for the best seats. That very thing is coming in the not so very far distant future. The twenty-five cent admission is already with us in a few (a very few, as yet) houses. It will be with us in very many houses before very long.

IN ERROR.—Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can., writes: "Regarding Mr. Spraker, Rush Hill, Mo., concerning an isolated plant: I do not think it advisable to use a 70 volt generator. One reason is that most of the apparatus manufactured is wound for 110 and 220 volts, also when you have a 70 volt generator it means having lamps, fans, etc., made especially for that voltage. Another thing: suppose Mr. Spraker needs a 10 K-W. generator, he would have to have a larger one at 70 volts than at 110. Since a larger machine means increased cost why not use the 110 volt current? To explain more clearly: assuming a 10 K-W. generator, 10 K-W. at 70 volts is about 140 amperes, whereas at 110 volts it would be only about 90 amperes for the same output, besides having a greater capacity for overloads. I think a 10 K-W. G. E. generator and a 15 h.p. Fairbanks Morse gasoline engine would be an excellent outfit. Of course he would have to apply to the G. E. people for particulars as to speed, etc., so as to get correct pulley ratio and then submit that to the F. M. company for particulars as to the engine. Of course he will have to use compound wound generator, with the regular resistance which goes with whatever moving picture machine he is using; also asking for a generator which will over-compound about 3 to 5 volts from no load to full load. Mr. Spraker can regulate his own compounding if he prefers, by increasing or decreasing the shunt on the series field. If it does not over-compound when tried out, increase the resistance in the shunt until it does, or vice versa if it over-compounds too much. But if he has no electrical experience he had better let the G. E. do it. There are numerous other arguments in favor of using the higher voltage, but it would consume too much space to explain them. One thing is that in using the lower voltage machine the generator won't be the only thing that will cost more. The main wires will have to be larger to carry the larger current flow. He may never have to use the full load capacity of the generator, but the N. E. Code requires cable of size to carry overload capacity of the generator. One more thing: economizers, rheostats, etc., are all made for 110 volts and if Mr. Spraker has already got his machine it means he will have to ship his resistance or economizer back to the factory to be changed to the proper voltage."

I have given this somewhat lengthy letter space for the reason that, although I believe Winnipeg is arguing wholly from wrong premises, still there are a number of things contained which are worthy of note in passing. In the first place it is hardly to be supposed that Mr. Spraker would have use for a generator of 10 K-W. capacity. Assuming that he will only use one arc at a time, and that most certainly his generator will be D. C. That would not require more than 45 amperes in any event, and very likely much less would be used—say 30 amperes. The arc voltage is fixed, averaging 48 volts, hence, utterly regardless of generator voltage, the arc itself will consume wattage approximately equal to the amperes times 48, or, with 30 amperes 1,440 watts. If ordinary resistance be used (any competent operator can quickly fix a rheostat made for any voltage to be used on a lower pressure) the wattage represented by the difference in the arc voltage times the amperes and the line voltage times the amperes will be wasted in the resistance. In this case, 1,440 watts would be used and 1,860 would be wasted if the pressure be 110, whereas at 70 the waste would only amount to 660 watts, and at 60 volts only 400. As to the incandescent lights the argument of Winnipeg holds good, since it requires a larger amperage for low voltage lamps than for those of higher filament resistance. However, it must be carefully remembered that in all probability Mr. Spraker's projection light will be the main thing. Of course if he is going into heavy incandescent lighting a somewhat different problem is presented. I assume, however, that his incandescent illumination will not exceed 30 amperes, at 70 volts, and that say 10 amperes of this, at least, will not be in use when the arc is burning. This would make a total necessary generator capacity of 60 amperes, or, at 70 volts, 4,200 watts. It will therefore readily be seen that the wire cost does not enter to any considerable extent at least. As to lamps, I believe no trouble will be experienced in securing 70 or 60 volt incandescent lamps. Fans might have to be specially wound. But inasmuch as this letter has raised interesting and somewhat important questions I invite comment from our readers. In this connection let it be said that I have had some very excellent letters indeed concerning the 60 volt engine-generator outfit put out by the Detroit Engine Works, Detroit, Mich.

CARBON CLAMP SCREWS.—C. P. Bruce, operator Cosy Theater. Pendleton, Ore., writes: "Concerning the carbon clamp screw trouble of Wilmington, N. C., page 299, January 27 issue, he says the screws continually get loose and become very hot. I had the same trouble and found it was caused by the ends of the screws becoming rough from burning or melting, so that hard lumps of melted iron formed on the end. When a carbon was put in the screws would be perfectly tight, but soon the rough points would sink in, and of course the carbon would become loose and sometimes would drop out unless I kept tightening up on the screw. The carbons and screws got very hot, and holes formed in the carbons where the screws dug in. I took the screws out and filed the ends perfectly smooth. Result: no more trouble. I file the screws a little every day now and they never loosen or heat.

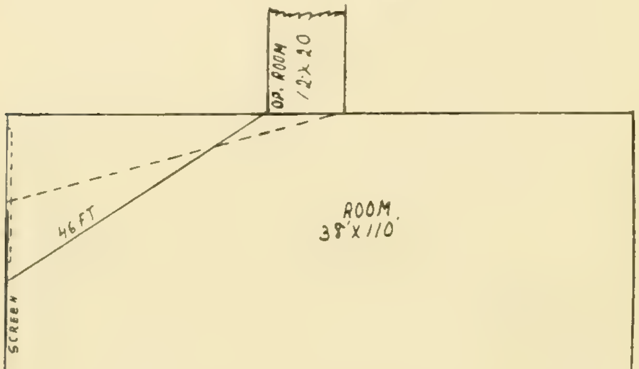
"Portland, Ore., wants to know what voltage Noah carried on his ark. For the benefit of Portland would say that Brother Noah used a 'flood-light.' Trust this will aid my perplexed friend in figuring the voltage."

We are obliged to you, friend Bruce, for submitting the clamp screw trouble remedy. The burned point is, I believe, carbonized iron and offers high resistance. I am not certain as to this, but believe it is correct. This Noah business is getting mixed. I had always supposed Noah projected the dove with his arc light, but now it turns out to be a flood light. However, judging by the number of critters Noah had aboard I should say the pressure on the arc must have been pretty high. Brother Bruce mentioned that I might use his name if I wished. I would much prefer to give name of writer, in addition to that of the city, but cannot do this unless specific permission is accorded.

NEW STUNT.—Marion, Ind., writes: "I have been making several improvements in my operating room in the past few weeks and believe some of them will help other exhibitors who, like myself, have only one operator, but would like to use two machines for running a continuous show. This idea seemed next to impossible when first thought of; but through the ingenuity of my brother, Howard Spurr, and my operator, Billy Kimball, a plan was devised, whereby one operator is able to run both machines. We are using two Edison machines, set at a distance of about three feet apart, in which space the operator sits. The machine at right of operator has a left hand drive through universal jointed shaft attached to the take up shaft. Universal shaft is used to allow framing of picture. Operator can thread up one machine while operating the other very easily. The pictures are dissolved by sheet iron shutters, operated by foot treadle. This method makes it possible for one picture to be dissolved into the other perfectly, and at the same time is an ideal fire protection. A motor rewind has also been installed, which is a great time saver for the operator. Our latest improvement is a telephone system of three branches, by which the operating room is connected with the entrance door and orchestra pit. Lamp signals are used in this system instead of bells, so as to avoid disturbing patrons. Other improvements are being contemplated, of which I will be glad to inform you if you are interested."

I wrote, asking further particulars as to the method of operating the right hand machine, but have received no reply. That telephone lamp signal is, I should imagine, very good indeed, if properly installed so that the audience would not see the signal. The motor rewind is something I strongly advocate. If rightly arranged it will save much damage to the film. The motor should be run at slow speed, rewinding in not less than three minutes, and there should be a brake on the reel from which the film is being wound so that it will wind tightly, thus obviating any "pulling down," which works immense injury to the film. There can be an arrangement easily added which will automatically shut off the motor when the film is all rewound so that the operator can start it and the motor will do the entire job without further attention. As to the machine drive I am sorry to say I cannot commend it. In the first place running a machine from the left hand side (as I understand is proposed for one machine) would be extremely awkward, to say the least. Machines and lamps are made to be operated from the right hand side and I do not believe it would be possible to operate one well from the other side. But aside from that I see no necessity for any such arrangement. A helper for the operator is not by any means prohibitive in cost. A boy is all that is necessary, if the operator is to do all the projecting. He can attend to the rewinding, threading the machines and setting the carbons, the latter under the observation and instruction of the operator. To run one machine while threading the other may be easy but—excuse me. Moreover, while for a time it was considered good practice to dissolve one picture into the next, that practice has been discarded in the best houses. Many of the really high class houses—houses where they pay great attention to excellence in projection, and all that goes with it, even stop the machine for one minute between the two subjects of a split reel. The idea is, and I hold it to be correct, that it gives the audience time to drop the old subject and be ready to receive the new. Please understand, Marion, that I am not criticising your methods, but simply pointing out to you something which may be of benefit. I myself at one time advocated the dissolving of one picture into the next, but was shown my error and recognized it as such. I think you will find an interval of one minute between each picture, even though it be a split reel, will be much better, though it might puzzle your audience, which is now accustomed to the other method, for a time. I shall be glad to have you tell us of the other improvements when made.

HEAVY SIDE-THROW.—Cumberland, Md., writes: "Attached find sketch of theater. Will you kindly inform me whether or not I can get a good picture as proposed, or will the machine have to be squarely in front of the screen?"



It would be practically impossible to get a satisfactory picture with a side throw of 19 feet in 46, unless the picture be a very small one. You could improve matters by placing machine and screen as indicated by dotted lines—that is, you could get a very fair picture that way if it be not too large. It would, however, not be a very desirable effect. The 110 foot throw is just a nice distance and I would advise you, unless there be reasons of which you have not spoken for placing machine in side room, to locate it at rear of the hall.

LARAMIE, WYO.—Laramie, Wyo., writes: "This city has 9,000 population. There are two motion picture houses owned by Cameron & King. Lyric, seating 390, uses three reels from General Film Company. Princess, seating 550, uses three reels, Independent. Two shows each night. No vaudeville Sunday. Matinee Saturday only. Good machines (Powers Six); good operators; good pay; good pictures; good business; everybody happy."

Laramie certainly did not waste any ink, but we are always glad to hear from our friends, be their letters long or short.

LIGHT PLANTS.—Mr. H. C. Smallfield, Electric Theater, Lynden, Wash., writes: "I have been very much interested in the discussion regarding light plants in small towns, especially in your issue of February 24. I think a man is foolish to install anything less than 110 volts. I installed my own plant about a year ago. It consists of a 7½ K-W. D. C. generator, 65 amperes, 110 volts, driven by a Fairbanks-Morse 12 h.p. gasoline engine. I light my whole theater, and use two arcs; one at 30 amperes and one at about 20 amperes for slides. I can truthfully say I do not know what trouble means. I have never had to close down one moment since the plant was installed. I start up about 6:30 P. M. and never go near it until I shut down (about 11 P. M.). though I have the usher go back occasionally to see if oil cups are feeding properly. Otherwise no one attends to plant while running. I installed a voltmeter, ammeter and my rheostat in my operating room and handle everything from there. I have a Powers Six, 1912 model, and as far as projection is concerned I have no trouble; my picture is 9 x 12 at 85 ft., and is perfectly clear all over; never have any trouble with condensers or light. It amuses me that so many men always have a bunch of trouble, while I have none; but I will say I generally know about a week ahead when there is possible trouble, and I always remedy the matter before the week is up. You are at liberty to publish this letter if you will; and I will gladly answer any one's letters, providing they enclose return postage. I am a close reader of the World and enjoy it very much. Will say that many times it has helped me to give perfect projection. I am building a new theater, and when completed will send you some photos of same. Regarding the care of commutator, will say that I keep everything clean and bright, and once in a while when brushes begin to sing I apply just a very little vaseline, that is all"

My dear sir, because you have had no trouble with your 110 volt plant does not prove that you would have had any with one of less voltage The whole thing lies here: you are using 30 amperes on one arc and 20 on the other. That means that you are wasting, in your rheostat a total of 3,250 watts. On the assumption that fuel costs you money, tha is expensive. It costs you more for the totally useless heat in those rheostats than it does to operate your arcs. Also there is just that much added pull, hence added wear on both engine and dynamo. Of course there is some advantage in being able to use 110 volt incandescent lamps, since they are standard and to be had almost anywhere. There is no early reason why a 60 or 70 volt outfit should not operate with as little trouble as one of the higher voltage; or if there is I would be glad to be told wherein the reason lies. Your plan of anticipating trouble is one which may well be emulated by all. It is an exemplification of that old saw "A stitch in time saves nine." Send on the photos.

QUESTIONS.—Princeton, N. J., asks: "'Why could not a three-wing shutter of the same pattern as is used outside be used inside next the aperture?' is a question you asked us to answer some time ago. I would say because it could not be gotten in that space, and even if it could it would cut off too much light. Kindly tell me why the stereo lens focal length is longer than that of the M. P. Please reply by mail if you will."

I simply must refuse to answer by mail, except where fee is enclosed to pay for the time. It is not that I would not like to, but time is money and the days are not long enough to do what I have to do. My mail is such that if I answered all those who want a personal letter I could do very little else and then—the pot would quit boiling. The three-wing shutter would not work inside because its chief value lies in the three wings bringing the alternations of light and darkness so close together that the eye does not see them at all AND in the keeping of the blades very nearly of the same width. If the width is exactly the same for all three there is no flicker at all, even when the machine is run much below normal speed, but the instant the width is varied the flicker reappears and as the variation becomes greater the flicker increases. The wings could not be anywhere nearly of equal width with an inside three-wing shutter. Space forbids my explaining why now. The stereo lens is of longer focal length because the aperture (slide mat) is much greater.

CONDENSERS COLORED.—Somerset, Pa., writes: "Am using 35 amperes of 110 volt, 133 cycle current. Only recently tackled A. C. Used D. C. before. My condensers are a lavender color. Why is this? I am projecting a 12-foot picture at 55 feet. Use two 6½ condensers. Ought I not use one 6½ and one 7½? I wanted it thus, but manager would not get them for me. Would like to join the union. How may I do it?"

The lavender color indicates faulty lens. It is due to an excess of some ingredient used in making the glass. You should change them at once, as they operate to injure your light. You have a 4 inch e. f. projection lens and I would prefer condensers of longer focal length, unless by their use you develop a ghost. One 6½ and one 7½, with the 7½ in front, ought to be about right. Under the present laws you cannot join the I. A. T. S. E., with which operators' unions are affiliated, except you be a resident of the city in which the union is located for a period of six months. This I hold to be wrong, as applied to operators, but it is the fact.

SALT BRINE AGAIN.—New Bedford, Mass., writes: "I tried out the Baltimore brother's idea of soaking carbons in salt brine, and find the same trouble our brother in Westfield had—the carbon's needle. I tried Electra and Henrion carbons; soaked them three days and then let them dry one week and a half. I feel a little doubtful as to whether the Baltimore brother is using as low as 20 A. A. C. I am on 110 volt, 60 cycle current through a Fort Wayne compensarc giving me 14-40-60 amperes. I made a small rheostat which I can throw in between my transformer and arc so I can raise my amperage 5 amperes at a time, thereby cutting out the jumps from 14 to 40 and 60 amperes. By soaking the carbons in salt brine I find I can cut out 10 amperes and get about as good a light. When using 30 amperes the carbons needle about ¾ of an inch, but when using 45 amperes they needle about 1½ inches."

We are obliged to you for the report. I am still inclined to believe there is something in this salt brine business, though just how much I cannot say. Suppose some of you Baltimore men who have experimented with Brother Gregory's plan come across with some information. Now don't all speak at once.

UNIQUE STUNT PROPOSED.—Stromsburg, Neb., writes: "Will you kindly let us know what you think of this: We want to put our machine in the basement of our theater, make a hole, or trapdoor, in the floor, and use the basement for the operating room. It is 20 ft. from the picture to the first row of chairs; the basement floor is 8 ft. below the theater floor, at the back of the house. This will give us a throw of about 30 ft. Our floor is flat for a distance of 20 ft. from the screen, and slopes from there to the front of the house. About two-thirds of our audience would have to see the picture through the light rays from the machine. Do you think that would be all right? We would want a picture about 9 or 9½ ft. wide. Can it be done? We made a screen out of compo board, such as is used in dwelling houses, instead of plaster. It is heavy cardboard with wood and cement between. We covered it with pure white, dull finish paint, but later gave it a coat of 'alabastine.' We made the alabastine pure white with a little blue and added just enough red to make it a very pale lavender. It gives excellent results. We burn several house lights all the time and they do not seem to affect the picture. The ceiling is of a light color, and the lights are along the walls about 5 feet from the ceiling. They are in ground glass shades and the shades are open towards the ceiling. Our idea was to get a reflection from the ceiling and it seems to work all right. We get the World every week and keep them on file. Do you remember when we thought a fellow was a chump that bought a one-pin machine, when he could have bought a machine with two pins for the same money?"

Sorry, gentlemen, but it won't work, I'm afraid. In the first place a 9 ft. picture at 30 ft. would require a very short focal length lens. You could throw such a picture at that distance, but it would probably be none too good, even under normal circumstances, but when you add an upward throw such as you propose I'm afraid you would find it would be unsatisfactory. I don't say it cannot be done, and the fact that the audience would look through the ray would not matter. I do not believe, however, it would be worth the trial. Those very short throws are bad at best. I had a smile at your mention of old days.

NEW COMMUTATOR STUNT.—St. Thomas, Ont., writes: "Had charge of generator at summer resort. Commutator was so dirty that generator would not readily raise voltage, or hold what it did raise under a load. Took brushes off, tacked oo sandpaper on smooth board and cleaned their surface; then dipped them in kerosene to a depth of one-half inch. Held them in the oil for ten seconds and then allowed them to absorb what remained on them when lifted out. Next took clean, white waste, dipped it in kerosene and squeezed out enough so it would not drip. Applied same to commutator, after starting the engine, and repeated the process until the waste was clean after application. Next wiped commutator off with clean waste, put the brushes back on and the commutator, which had been a fine display of fireworks before, has never had a spark since. The generator worked four hours a day with a 5 per cent. overload and t has never winked since the kerosene stunt. The oil absorbed by the brushes acts as a lubricant. This should be done twice a day where the generator works six or seven hours. I cleaned mine thus twice a week. There s a generator here which has been run an average of six hours a day for hree years and has never had a piece of sandpaper or a bit of compound on it. It has the above treatment every day and is one of the prettiest commutators you ever saw. I am using 25 cycle, 110 volt current and am roubled with very unsteady light. At times it will burn as steady as a rock; at other times it will jump all over the screen. It will be burning bright and suddenly one side of the screen will be dark, or the arc will go out before I can touch it. Have an Engineering Equipment Supply Company economizer. Have cleaned the lamp, put in new wires and tried everything I can think of. Have tried all kinds of carbons. If I use soft cored carbons the core eats out, leaving a hollow crater. If this does not break off the light goes out; if it breaks off it does so in pieces, and that means pots on the screen. By getting the carbons red hot and dropping them n water I partially overcome this. I get the best results by using two medium hard carbons, samples of which I am sending you. Have tried oaking the carbons in motor oil. It is a great improvement, but there s considerable smoke. Can you offer any advice?"

I have published the kerosene commutator cleaning stunt for the reason hat, while the thing does not look reasonable to me, still one cannot always ometimes tell, and you are positive as to its results. I would suppose what amounts to a kerosene bath would cause trouble, and would advise that if ried out it be done with caution. The carbons you send look like a coke arbon made of rather coarsely ground material. I would not suppose they would give good projection light. You failed to mention your amperage, which is important. I am inclined to believe you do not feed your arc losely enough. I have had no experience with 25 cycle current. I once before asked the Buffalo brothers to set forth their experience with this current, but they failed to respond. I am afraid I can offer you no advice of value. Would be glad to have letters from those having experience with 5 cycle current.

LIGHT PLANT.—Athabasca Landing, Alberta, Canada, writes: "On page 687, February 24 issue, you howl for the constable. If he comes, lease get him to attend to your own office force. Up to date I haven't eceived my Moving Picture World for February 17 and I surely need it n my business. I see on page 688 February 24 issue, that Mr. R. E. Spraker asks for information concerning light plants. We have been running such a one since August 29, 1911. We use an 8 h.p. Foos gasoline ngine, which I see advertised in the World this week. Connected by elt is 5½ K-W. General Electric Co.'s dynamo which supplies 44 amperes t 110 to 125 volts, of which we use 22 amperes for the arc. We have 4 sixteen c.p. lights for the auditorium—these are off when pictures are eing run—one sixteen c.p. light for the piano, and 9 sixteen c.p. lights or the lobby and cigar stand. We have a fully equipped marble switchoard in the power house. The voltmeter on this board shows a variation of nly two volts when the arc is off and the house lights on. With the arc n there is a variation of one volt. This is much better than current upplied by any city power plant in western Canada that I have been in. We use slightly less than a gallon of gasoline per hour. The cost of lubriating oil is very little. Up to date we have spent $1.30 on repairs for he engine, and this was for a graphite bushing for the revolving electrode. see a lot of talk about sparking brushes on dynamos and motors. I am till using the same set of carbon brushes sent with the dynamo. Those boiled in oil and they have only sparked once. To remedy this I took a iece of emery cloth (had no sandpaper handy) and found to my entire atisfaction that if you want to work, and work hard, use emery on a ommutator. My commutator is fine and smooth and is hardly cut at all. have been told that boring a small hole half way through in the connecon end of a carbon brush and filling same with oil is a good thing, but o my mind boiling in oil answers the same purpose."

I sicked the constable on Denny, our subscription man, as soon as he rrived, and the missing copy is on its way. We are obliged to you for nformation concerning light plant. You are using about 28 amperes hen arc is on and about 17 when it is off. As the arc is probably on fourfths of the time, at least, you probably use an average of close to 25 ameres, or 2,750 watts. Assuming gasoline to be 20 cents per gallon, and ying aside the items of depreciation and interest on investment, your ght is costing close to 8 cents per K-W. hour, which is pretty high. This ould be greatly reduced by a generator of less voltage, particularly in our case, where the bulk of the incandescent lights are burning only a omparatively short time. You are wasting 1,430 watts in the rheostat, nd that costs money. Your rheostat is costing more than all your other ghts put together. You cannot avoid some of that waste, but a less oltage would largely reduce it. With a 60 volt generator you would only aste 330 watts; with a 70 volt machine only 550. I'm not telling you his to make you feel bad, but to point the lesson of rheostat waste with 110 olt pressure.

AUTO OUTFIT.—Mr. J. W. Myrtle, the Art Theater, 119 E. Main om Payson, Ill., headed 'Automobile Power.' I have a 4 cylinder car nd wish to put out the same kind of show. Any information you can pply will be appreciated."

If friend Myrtle had been a "constant reader" of the Department he ould have seen the owner's address (of the auto, I mean) on page 795, eptember 16 issue. If he will write Mr. E. G. Kay, Snohomish, Wash. suppose he is still there) I am sure friend Kay will supply any possible formation. Brother Kay might write Mr. Myrtle if he sees this.

LICENSE FEE.—New York City expends a postal card in asking: "Is it necessary to have a license for an open air moving picture show? If so how much does it cost?" The writer gave an address, but I doubt if the dead letter office expert could make it out. Yes, you must have a license. Why in the name of common sense don't you step into a telephone booth, call up the license bureau and get all that information in about two minutes, instead of writing me?

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—In February 24 issue a letter from an operator in Columbus, Ohio, was published, in which the writer complained of bad treatment. We had the matter investigated and found that apparently the writer had used these columns to vent a personal spite, and had no just grounds for complaint. We proposed to publish the facts and name the man, but, in deference to the wishes of the machine manufacturer implicated, did not do so. Now comes a letter from the operator at present working at the house in question and it fully confirms the investigation we caused to be made. I want to say right here and now, once and for all, that these columns are not for the purpose of supplying space for any one to "get even." We will print, regardless of whose toes get smashed in the process, letters setting forth genuine grievances. But let me warn you to be sure they ARE genuine, for in future I shall name the man who perpetrates a fake grievance, when it be proven to be a fake. I can usually spot such letters, but once in a while I get fooled. I did this time, but I will undertake the contract of making it warm for the next one who gets away with it.

CONDENSERS.—Ft. Worth, Tex., writes in reply to New York, saying that in his opinion condensers break because they are too tight in their mount. Should have some play edgewise. This is all true enough and has been set forth many times in these columns. It refers to the round metal mounts only. Most modern machines no longer use these mounts. They are out of date and a back number.

SEVERAL THINGS.—Little Rock, Ark., writes: "Have one of the best managers I ever worked for. Managers of to-day are much more considerate of their employees than they were six years ago, when I first began operating. I have a 50 ft. throw, picture 12 ft. Operating room is about 20 ft. higher than center of screen. Find placing small piece of tin under aperture plate, just below lower screw, helps the focus. (Your aperture must not set square with lens.—Ed.). Use 6½ and 7½ condensers, latter in front. (Think probably two 7½s would do better.—Ed.). My current pressure, hence amperage, is not steady. Am using an old model one-pin Edison machine. Use Arco Bio carbons. Will you kindly advise me as to how to improve focus on picture? Of course cannot move bottom of screen out. Would like some help with the light also. I have fuse plugs for 220 volts, 75 amperes. Would this affect the light? Have polished all connections and removed charged wire ends in lamphouse. Would you advise using two rheostats in series? Would like to call attention to the fact that all condensers are not round and this has an effect on breakage when a round metal mount is used. Operators should see that no little particles of carbon are under edges of condensers, as they help break the lenses. I have found that a stick of graphite mixed with a little oil makes a fine star lubricant. What is your opinion of this? Also how about resin for take-up belt? Where could a moving picture camera be bought and what would be its cost? Do camera men have to furnish their own cameras, are they organized and what is their pay? How long would it require for an operator to learn to handle a camera? Is the supply greater than the demand for cameramen? Where could I address some company for chance to learn?"

And you didn't feel much like asking questions that day either, did you? You have not described the out-of-focus effect clearly enough for me to be of assistance. For a 20 ft. drop in fifty I believe you will need an especially selected lens—a very good one. Even then I am not sure you can get a sharp picture all over the screen, but you might. The short throw and heavy drop is bad. No, those fuses would have no effect at all, but they are of higher amperage than is necessary. Better cut down to about ten or fifteen amperes in excess of what you are using. Using two rheostats in series would simply cut down your amperage, hence your light. Didn't you mean multiple? You stand very much in need of the handbook. Better send in $1.50 for it at once. Your knowledge of fuses, resistance, etc., is very weak indeed. Graphite is a most excellent lubricant. If take-up belt is properly adjusted there will be no need for resin. You can buy a moving picture camera from Mr. Eberhard Schneider, 219 2d Avenue, New York City; don't know the price. Expert cameramen are always in demand and the pay is fair. Cannot give you exact figures, as it varies. I believe they are not organized. It would be little use writing manufacturers. You would have to apply in person and I don't believe they would take on an apprentice at all. Give me more concise information about that out-of-focus effect and the light and I will try and help you.

POSTCARD PROJECTOR.—Fall River, Mass., asks: "Am thinking of investing in a postcard projector and would like your advice. Would it project 60 to 70 feet, in street advertising, so that the picture will show clear? My idea is to use clippings from the Moving Picture World to advertise show I intend putting on in town of 6,000."

I would suggest that you place your requirements before the seller of the device in question, in writing, and require a written guarantee as to its satisfactory performance under the conditions.

CONDENSER BREAKAGE.—If Marianna, Ark., will use two 7½ condensers I believe ghost trouble will be helped a little, as this will remove the arc a trifle further from the lens. Condenser breakage is a hard proposition, but you should avoid direct draughts striking the lamphouse, also avoid opening the lamphouse door immediately after shutting off the arc as much as possible. Keep ventilator in top of lamphouse perfectly clean and free. Glad to hear you speak so well of your operator. Look back through the Department for a few weeks and you will find this condenser breakage matter discussed. I might also add that it has been discussed without the "dis" a good many times.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—Holton, Kans., writes: "Use 60 cycle, 110 volt A. C. through Ft. Wayne compensarc; Bio carbons; 12 ft. picture at 78 feet; 6½ and 7½ condenser lenses. Two machines: Powers Six and Standard. On 30 amperes have small, blue ghost. On 40 it almost disappears. On stereo side have large blue ghost in center and yellow sides. Tried moving lamp back and forth without result. Manager says I should not go over 40 amperes except on a very dark picture. He used Powers Six and Compensarc in another town and says he never went over 40 amperes with an 18 ft picture at 40 feet. Same current we have here. Now what I want to know is why we have to use 60 amperes to get same results he got with 40? Have copy of Handbook and can recommend it to all operators. Attached find sketch of way we are hooked up."

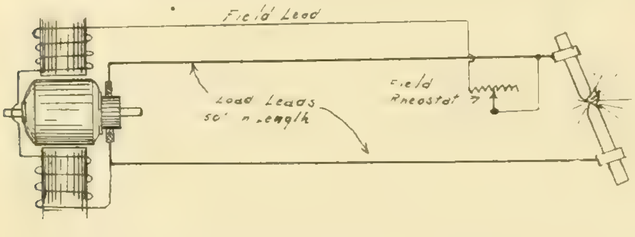
Wiring is all right. You will do well to get two 7½ condensers. When manager says he got the same results, or anywhere nearly as good, with 40 amperes and a picture with 243 square feet (an 18 ft. picture is 13½ x 18, not 14 x 18) as you can get with 60 amperes and a picture having only 108 square feet, same current, he is making a statement which he cannot back up with performance. The man does not live who can do that, unless there is something very radically wrong with your light. However, it is not possible to project what I would consider a good picture with 40 amperes A. C., covering 243 square feet of surface with the light. For good illumination it requires 45 amperes of D. C. for an 18 ft. picture. Of course if you have a ghost, that indicates poor light and deadens the picture extremely, but ghost or no ghost an 18 ft. picture with 40 amperes A. C. has very faint illumination. It is by no means brilliant.

GENERATORS AND VOLTAGE.—Mr. J. Frank Martin, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "As a constant reader of the Moving Picture World, I wish to say that I consider it indispensable in my capacity as an exhibitor and manufacturer of moving picture supplies. The recent contributions to your Department on motor-generator sets is particularly interesting, as I have had considerable experience with these machines which in many respects is at variance with that of several of your correspondents. I have found that it is practical to arrange nearly every standard type of direct current generator of less than 125 volt rating, either shunt or compound wound, so that it will regulate perfectly for an arc. The connections are shown in the accompanying sketch and the requirements are that the energy for field excitation be taken off of the load leads near the arc lamp by extending the field circuit to this point. The length of leads necessary is determined readily by using a rather long length of wire at first, then tapping the field circuit in on this wire at different points until the proper point for the best regulation is determined. The efficiency of a machine arranged in this manner is about 2 per cent. less than that of an automatic (Rosenberg patent) generator, the cost is 20 per cent. less.



"I have used and sold these machines for motion picture projector illumination and have arranged and installed larger equipments for arc welding in iron foundries. An equipment I have used for a year and a half consists of a 1.5 K-W. 75 volt, compound wound, Peerless generator driven by a 3 h.p. gasoline engine. The load leads are 150 feet of No. 8 duplex cable and the field circuit is 150 feet No. 12 wire. Special carbons are used and the field rheostat is mounted directly under the moving picture machine, allowing of the greatest flexibility in controlling the arc."

The letter is well composed, well written and apparently comes, as alleged, from a business man. But I don't seem able to grasp his idea. If I understand him aright he proposes to operate a projection arc with a generator of any voltage, up to 125, merely by inserting resistance in the field circuit. What I am totally unable to grasp is what his idea is of lengthening the field circuit and using a field rheostat. Lengthening the leads would merely operate to create a little more resistance therein, which it seems to me might as well, or better be had in the field rheostat. That it would make any electrical difference whether the field leads be connected close to the arc or a distance away is news to me. You say, friend Martin, that you have operated this scheme successfully. All right! Will you kindly go a good, long way further into details and show us the exact why and wherefore? If you can operate a 110 volt generator at between 45 and 50 volts, and do it successfully, I, for one, would certainly like to know how the stunt is performed—all about it, in fact.

SEVERAL THINGS.—Selma, Ala., writes: "Have an Edison, Model B, machine, 110 volt, 133 cycle A. C. Have a transformer all to myself. They claim it to be of 40 ampere capacity. Use ⅝ Bio cored carbons. Now project an 11 ft. picture at 45 feet. Have an old make Edison rheostat, rewired. It did fine at first. Got a good light. Don't know whether or not the trouble lies in the rheostat, but now I can scarcely get any light at all at times. The arc burns nicely for a little while, then it begins to run around the carbon-tip, and will almost go out, only burning a little in front. Picture then can hardly be seen. Have tried solid carbon below, but it does no better. Where is my trouble? Am thinking of setting my screen back 12 feet, making a 57 ft. throw instead of a 45 ft. as now. Can I do that with my present lens? Will the picture be as plain? About how much larger will it be? Am considering putting in my own light plant. Will operate one arc and 20-16 c.p. incandescents. Will 40 amperes at 60 volts do it? Have in mind the Detroit Electric Light Plant, of the size mentioned. Do you think it will give satisfaction?"

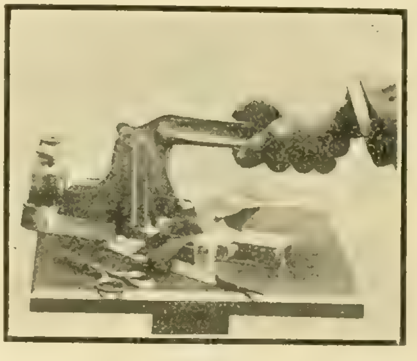
As to your light trouble, you have not told me what amperage you are using. Begin at main switch and take all wire connections apart, cleaning the wires and contacts thoroughly. Set your rheostat on a sheet of glass to make sure it cannot be grounded. Clean out the inside of your carbon jaws perfectly clean—until the metal shines. I presume you have an Edison lamp. Are you sure the carbons do not become loose after the arc has burned a short time? File the points of the clamp screws until they are flat. You cannot use solid carbon below with A. C. That is only for D. C. Be sure the lamp leads are not charred inside the lamphouse. If this does not remedy the trouble it will be well to have the light company test out the transformer. If that proves to be all right the trouble must lie in the rheostat. What it is I cannot say. Possibly you are using very weak amperage and when the rheostat gets hot it chokes the current down so low that it is useless for projection. You can project just as good a picture at 57 feet with present lens as at 45 feet, but it will be 35.196 inches wider. If it spreads 11 feet (132 inches) in 45 feet then it spreads 132÷45=2.933 inches in one foot and in 12 feet additional throw it would spread 2.933×12=35.196 inches. To get a smaller picture you will have to get a lens of longer focal length. A lens of 5 inch equivalent focus will come very close to it. Your present lens is about 4 inch e. f.

SATIN CURTAIN.—Montgomery, W. Va., asks: "What do you think of a white satin curtain? Is it pretty good, or better than the ——— curtain?"

Others who have tried white satin have not given encouraging reports. Don't believe you would find it satisfactory. Could not make out name of curtain you ask for comparison with.

EXCELLENT FILM MENDER.—Mr. A. J. Wellman, Catlettsburg, Ky., has perfected what seems to be a most excellent film mender. It combines in one device a method of matching the holes and a press.

The whole thing is of metal neatly nickeled, is light and occupies little space. It contains a receptacle for film cement bottle, which is firmly held. Shears, etc., come with it.



There is need for such a device, reasonable in price and at the same time effective. Mr. Wellman's press is both. Sufficient pressure cannot be applied to a patch with the fingers to make a strong joint. The cement welds, rather than cements, therefore pressure is essential. The price is $5.00.

LONGER THROW.—Hawarden, Ia., writes: "Wish to move my screen back about 4 ft. Just the screen itself. The walls on either side I cannot move. It will be a box effect. Will this affect the picture at all? There will be no light on screen until projection of picture. Also must I change lenses or will the one I have answer? Now have about 60 ft. throw; picture in perfect focus."

The box effect will not affect the picture at all, so far as its excellence is concerned. You will have to look out though or view of part of the picture will be cut off from those sitting down in front and to one side. Your lens will project just as good a picture but it will be a little larger. You can tell just how much as follows: Measure exact distance from lens to present screen. Measure exact width of picture. Divide the width of picture by throw, which gives you spread of light ray for each foot of throw; thus: suppose throw is 60 ft. and picture 10 feet wide. 10 divided by 60 = 10-60 or 1-6 of a foot the light spreads for every foot of throw. 1-6 of a foot is two inches. For 4 ft. additional throw, the spread would be 2 X 4 = 8 inches. Hence at 64 feet you would have a 10 ft. 8 in. picture. It can only be kept the present size by changing the lens.

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

FROM the sublime to the ridiculous" was never better exemplified in a practical way than by developments in the motion picture field during the past few weeks. very effort or accomplished act in jumping from the rooklyn Bridge has been classified as ridiculous by the or- nary observer of events, and the sublime aspiration of e motion picture man has been the realization of an effort get the Chief Magistrate of the Nation before the motion cture camera in the act of doing something destined to be- me historical—not in the sense of political history, but al, unstaged making of real history. Score two bull's eye r the animated man. A steeplejack jumped off the Brook- n Bridge and, with the aid of a parachute, landed safely in e water within reaching distance of a friendly tug hired a motion picture company for the purpose. The public ill soon see the act reproduced. This is where the "canned" eater gets a long lead on the regular theatrical thriller. ne latter can show the man who does the trick and em- llish the so-called act with a very realistically painted at," but they cannot show the original stunt.

To my mind that parachute bridge jump was a most strik- g piece of enterprise. I might say it was audacious enter- ise. True, the parachute modified to a considerable extent e element of risk, but it by no means wiped out the chance increasing the cast of characters by the addition of an dertaker. The act will no doubt be worked into some -up-and-take-notice drama and for months after its pro- ction the quill drivers who answer the letter writers to e motion picture correspondence editor will be kept busy ving to convince the "anxious readers" that the jump was tually made. But, after all, how fragile is fame! A breeze doubt, a failure of actual observance, a common sense mparison of the probabilities and possibilities of human complishments soon puts fame on the frazzle. The man o "takes his life in his hands" soon finds (especially if he a bridge jumper) that there is a bread line now willing for same amount of money, or less, to do his stunt with less vantages, and everyone in the line files a lien on the niche the hall of fame the jumper who jumps thinks he is en- ed to, until the other fellows get a chance to jump. If you ubt this communicate with almost any maker of the natu- in motion and he will tell you that since the parachute np he has been deluged by letters from dare-devil beings o are willing to leap from the bridge to the river with hing more on or about their person to guard against in- y, or—well, say dissolution, than nerve.

have heard some people say that to get a man to take h a chance, even with a parachute, is the limit that evokes nand for a halt in motion picture strenuousness. Of rse there are people who would kick if a man jumped m the bridge wrapped in a pneumatic suit with a ton of thers as a landing spot. Such people are always with us. ey are more persistent in their anxiety over the sting t death is to bring us than the highest salaried life insur- e agent. They are so numerous and persistent that the rage citizen has, through constant touch, cultivated a rit of joviality when contemplating results. Personally, I ch little importance to the anticipations, protests, or any er manifestations on the part of such people. But I will that when such acts as the Brooklyn Bridge stunt are uired for pictures the producers should not go outside ranks for the star performer. I have observed some vers in some pictures who could fill the bill with profound sfaction to the public, if not to themselves; and I do not k the public would burst a blood vessel in expression of ignation if the star failed to make good. I am inclined hink that, to the contrary, there would be a grand rush options on niches in the hall of fame to perpetuate the of those who had so heroically relieved a suffering lic.

nother kind of a jump was made by the picture taking f of another New York producing company. They ped to Washington in time to catch President Taft sign- the document admitting Arizona as one of the States of Union. As an evidence of the faith many people have in the ability of motion picture makers to fake scenes so true to nature that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish the original from the imitation, I need only cite the inquisitiveness of the exhibitor who wrote to the company that produced the picture asking the name of the actor who impersonated the President and requesting that his photo be forwarded for lobby display. Can you beat it? Was ever greater temptation offered to green-goods men?

An exhibitor takes exception to some sentiments expressed in this column recently wherein the adverse opinion of a representative of a picture producing firm was given on the proposition as to whether the manufacturers of such co-operate with the exhibitors in securing certain legislation. It was stated that it would be inconsistent for the manufacturers to take active steps, particularly when there were factions of exhibitors in controversy. This is what the exhibitor taking exception says: "That argument holds good only in part. For their own protection the manufacturers should sustain and assist in every way the exhibitor who seeks to have his seating increased. For this reason: The managers of houses such as are on the Loew and Fox circuits are not working in the interest of the manufacturers. If they could exterminate the smaller exhibitors and get the field to themselves there would be no necessity for the number of releases that are now made. Take any of the larger houses and note the amount of junk that is put upon the screens. Drive the small men out of business and you kill the spirit of competition that creates the demand for a continuous supply of new subjects. The big fellows are in for cheap vaudeville, not for pictures, and they care nothing for the pictures except to fill in the programs and keep down the number of acts. Goodbye to the first and second run demand if these people ever get the field. Then the manufacturers will see that they did have an interest that was in community with those of the exhibitor."

By the way, the "Onward the 600" bill before the Board of Aldermen seems to have a bad crimp in it. A report gained circulation that the bill was passed on February 13th. I understand that a certain Alderman had the bill on the calendar—in fact, it was in his pocket and booked to be passed—on the 13th. These Tim Sullivans, Foxes and the side partners are wise. I recommended not long ago that the exhibitors get together. Have they? Yes. To talk about the pictures. It is a funny thing that most of the small picture houses in this country were started by politicians—men who had inside information, and with all their political knowledge and experience they are not able to help themselves.

Most exhibitors boast to their patrons of the political influence they havefl. Most of those who make the boast are busy condemning the men from whom they claim the power.

CHILD ACTOR WITH ESSANAY.

The Essanay Company has been fortunate in securing the "most perfect" child in Chicago for portrayal in their films. Little Miss Hillis Krafthefer, over whom artists and photographers have raved and deluged with offers to pose for them, first attracted attention last August when she made her début at a Congress of All Nations in Chicago, and immediately the critics became enthusiastic over her perfect development and predict she will grow into the perfection of form of the woman of ancient Greece. Hillis is a splendid little actress with a world of natural talent that is truly remarkable, and the Essanay Company will introduce her to the film-world in a beautiful subject written especially for her and admirably suited to show her great ability.

EXCELLO SLIDE INK.

The Reid's Diffuser Company are sending a useful souvenir to all those answering their advertisement in this paper, it being the formula for making Excello Slide Ink. With this ink you can write upon glass slides with a pen, the same as you can upon paper and it does not run or blot. They send you the formula and you can prepare it as you need it. The ink is very handy for those who wish to make their own advertising or announcement slides and costs very little to prepare.

GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL FEATURE FILM COMPANY MOVES.

Owing to the rapid increase in business the Great Northern Special Film Company has found its quarters at 1 Union Square, New York, too small and consequently has moved to 42 East 14th Street, where it will occupy an entire floor having large and commodious quarters.

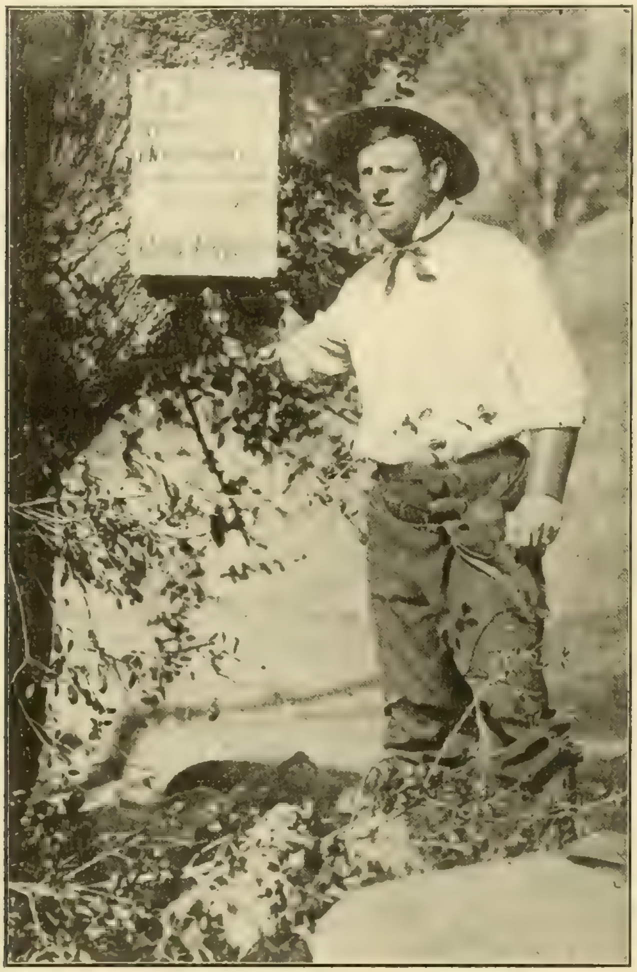
"A Road Agent's Love

One of G. M. Anderson's Wild West Productions—Full of Heart Interest.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

The title of this film could have well been changed to another that would have removed the suspicion of outlawry. This would have been all the more appropriate since there is not a deed of outlawry committed throughout the film. In these days, when so many uncalled for onslaughts are made on moving pictures by finical reformers, it is wise to take all precautions against the use of anything that will tend to prejudice either censor or audience against a film.

This film shows that no man is altogether bad. Not only so; it shows that a man who has scouted law and danger may yet have the redeeming trait of self-sacrifice, in order that the woman he loves may escape a wrecked life.



Scene from "A Road Agent's Love" (Essanay).

"A Road Agent's Love" is the product of Essanay's Western Company, with G. M. Anderson as producer, and actor in the titular role. There are several fine outdoor scenes in the film, with rattling good exhibitions of spirited horseback riding, and the photography, as in "Teaching a Liar a Lesson," is very pleasing. Altogether the incidents of the story smack of the West in the 60's or 70's, and they are dramatically worked out in the pictures.

John Mackley is in the hands of a money-lender, and a broken leg prevents him from meeting a note when due. He succeeds in putting off the payment until a future date, in the hope that better times will come in the interim. His wife and daughter, Lucy, comprise his family.

Lucy, just budding into womanhood, has formed an attachment for a young man, who had rendered herself and mother a little service one day. They have met several times and love has become mutual. She knows nothing of his avocation or his past, only that he is living in the neighborhood.

One day she surprises him behind a big rock on the highway, just as the daily stage turns a bend in the road and approaches. Andy, her lover, seems slightly disconcerted, but soon recovers his wonted composure and good nature.

On reaching home that day, she is told by her father ar mother that they will be homeless unless she consents to mar the money-lender. Broken-hearted she writes a notes and plac it on the big tree which has been the trysting place for herse and Andy. The note informs him that she must marry someo else to save her home, and bids him farewell. Next day sh visits the tree and finds a note addressed to her. It is signed " Friend," and advises her that a notorious bandit, for whom th authorities are looking, has taken refuge in a certain cave. Sh is requested to get the reward of $5,000 for his capture and avoi marrying the money-lender.

Scene from "A Road Agent's Love" (Essanay).

Lucy hastens to the sheriff with the news, and accompanys hi and his posse to the cave, where she discovers that Andy is th outlaw. She pleads with the sheriff that there must be a mis take, but he takes off his prisoner and turns over the rewar to her.

The curtain falls as the mortgage is paid off, and as Luc overcome with remorse, whispers to her mother that she wi wait for her lover until his term has expired. This film will b released Saturday, April 6th.

TEACHING A LIAR A LESSON (Essanay).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade

An entertaining farce, entitled "Teaching a Liar a Lesson will be released by the Essanay Company on Friday, April 5t It is by the Eastern company, under the direction of McMackin, who scored a success in "The Lemon" a short tim ago.

The story is told with well-connected, rapid-fire action, an several of the situations are extremely ludicrous. The story, to is away from the hackneyed type and springs quite a number o surprises on us during its development.

The scene showing the visit of the braggart to the room o the Russian anarchist loses a great deal of its semblance of rea ism by the poor make-up of Philip. Those whiskers, thoug adding a hideous mein to the would-be red-hand man, are " dead give away."

Pretty Jane Grey is loved by a young artist named Phil Reese. Billy Barclay, a braggart, appears on the scene and tur the girl's head by accounts of his brave and hazardous doing. H is overheard by her brother, Jim, and Philip, who plot to r veal Billy's real character to Jane.

Billy is especially eager to marry Jane, as she is heiress t $50,000, and he is living from hand to mouth. The boys, knowin Billy's impecuniosity, insert an advertisement in a local pape asking one William Barclay to call at a certain address and lear something to his advantage. The advertisement further rea that "there is something coming to you."

One of the stories so vaingloriously told Jane by Billy's, na rated how he had on one occasion foiled a band of Russian a archists, and how he had secured their private papers. Judg of his dismay, on calling at the address given in the newspap advertisement, to find a scantily furnished room occupied by murderous looking Russian, who immediately locked both doo of the apartment as soon as Billy entered.

Under threatened pain of death, Billy is commanded to gi up the stolen anarchistic documents. On his knees he protes that he never had seen such papers and never had attended meeting of anarchists. The bearded stranger makes him sig a confession to that effect and next orders Billy to accompan him to another house in the neighborhood.

To Billy's astonishment, he is conducted to the home of Jane, here she and her brother Jim are found in the sitting room. ne is thoroughly frightened at the aspect of the stranger and the rough usage to which he subjects poor Billy. The latter eads with her and Jim for protection; but the stranger openly cuses Billy as being an escaped prisoner from a French jail, here he had badly injured a number of the attendants.

Scene from "Teaching a Liar a Lesson" (Essanay).

This was another of his escapades which Billy had recounted Jane, and she is surprised to see him kneeling in supplication the stranger and confessing that he had never been in a rench prison and that he had lied. At this moment the fierce-oking Russian takes off his beard and the face of the smiling hilip is revealed. Billy, the braggart and liar, falls back speech-ss for a moment, and then rushes from the house, as Jane shes into the outstretched arms of Philip.

A LESSON FOR "BUSY" HUSBANDS.

The man who is too busy to fulfill his simplest family obli-tions—to be in that family's company a little of the time had better go look at "My Baby's Voice," a Thanhouser cture issued Friday, March 29. The story shows how a ife is almost tempted from her duties merely because her lpmate is so "rushed" with business affairs he uncon-iously neglects her. Running into an old friend, the lonely ife accepts his invitation to go walking and takes her baby ughter along. She does not intend disloyalty to her hus-nd, but she craves a stroll and an escort, and the old friend convenient.

But in the end he proves no friend at all, and when, follow-g fresh signs of her busy husband's "neglect," she is all rage d resentment, he asks her to elope. She is about to con-nt when through the manipulation of plugs by the switch-ard girl she hears her baby's voice. The innocent tones the child dispel completely the temptation, and finally the sband finds he can cut down his business hours enough to end several of 'em at home, whereupon the day is saved.

MR. FREDERICK GUEST.

Few interpreters of the silent drama are so well equipped by reason of talent and experience as Frederick Guest, who is now playing leads and character parts for the Champion Film Company, being a member of the stock company. Mr. Guest has the experience of a wide and varied stage career, playing important rôles with many of the leading companies in the legitimate drama. He was in the support of Booth and Barrett, for two years; Julia Marlowe, two seasons; Mattie Wainwright, one season; Bellew and Potter, one season, and with Madame Mojeska two seasons. Mr. Guest is quite a veteran in the moving picture game, having appeared prominently in Biograph and Reliance pictures, being a member of the companies of those concerns. He has taken important and difficult rôles in Champion pictures of recent release, and will appear regularly hereafter. He is a man of charming personality both on and off the stage, and a conscientious worker.

"DANTE'S INFERNO" (Milano Films) IN NEW JERSEY.

Within the last few weeks two large theaters, ordinarily running moving pictures and vaudeville, have broken all previous box-office records with the Milano production of "Dante's Inferno;" one being the Monticello Theater in Jersey City, with a capacity of over a thousand, and the other, the Broad Street Theater in Trenton, with a capacity of more than 1,700. In the Jersey City Theater the attraction ran for a full week with such results as indicated above. In Trenton on February 22, 23 and 24, despite adverse weather conditions, the attendance averaged seven thousand a day and the receipts beat all former records, including the Harry Lauder nights. The production was presented in a masterly manner in both houses, being under the direction of W. Stephen Bush, who also delivered the lecture.

PICTURE WORK WAS NO BAR.

As if to prove that being a popular photoplayer is not a bar to the regular stage but rather a recommendation to it, comes the announcement that the "Peggy" of the Lubin comedy stories has been engaged for the "big time" variety theaters. Miss Peggy Glynn (which is "Peggy's full name) goes with Miss Lydia Mac Millan in a sketch act after a connection with the Lubin, Thanhouser and Powers film companies. The vaudeville managers are slowly but surely raising the bars that once made stage employment impossible for film favorites, just as have their associates of the legitimate. This means merely that picture playing has attracted enough high-grade artists to make it worth the while of the theatrical managers to abolish foolish prohibitions.

The Spectator.

By G. F. Blaisdell.

TALKING last week with Chief Wallace, of the Bureau of Licenses, I asked him if his department was receiving many complaints against the picture houses.

"No," replied the chief, "complaints are rare. And if the Board of Aldermen passes the pending code for the government of the picture business they will be even rarer. You see, with the present limit of 300 seats many houses are unable to put in the number of seats their places will comfortably accommodate. By allowing exhibitors to use up to 600 chairs the 'standee' problem will to a great extent be done away with. Of course, the chief violations filed against picture shows are of 'standees' and of permitting the admittance of unaccompanied children. If the exhibitors are given an opportunity to put in more seats they won't be liable to take so many chances in evading the law."

Asked as to whether he favored a municipal censorship board to pass on pictures shown in New York City, the commissioner put up his hands.

"Far be it from me," he said, "publicly to express an opinion on so interesting a question."

"You believe, do you not," I asked, "that the National Board is doing good work?"

"I do," replied Chief Wallace emphatically; "I have said so many times."

The number of picture show licenses in New York City, said the chief, ranges between 650 and 700.

Biograph has scored, and scored heavily, in "Blot in the 'Scutcheon." The entire production will stand analysis. In conception, in execution, in the stage settings—both outside and inside—and in the work of the principals, it is worthy of praise. While the acting of the erring sister was of a high character, as was also that of the young man who took the part of Henry, the lover, it seems to this writer that the honors fall to the interpreter of Thorold, the upholder of the family's good name. To the gift of the bearing and the features of the patrician he adds the art of the actor—and, what is sometimes difficult in the semi-pantomime of the silent screen, he never overplays his part.

The director of the Biograph, like the good whist player, knows the rules of his game and when, and incidentally how, to break them. The "Blot in the 'Scutcheon" must have given the Censorship Board a bad quarter of an hour before it placed its O. K. on the two reels. Frankly, it is a question whether it is a picture that should be shown to children. The clandestine meeting of the lovers in the wood, prior to a conventional introduction; the exit into the denser forest; the fading light and total darkness; the intervening screen which bluntly proclaims the fact that a sin is being committed; the returning light and the emergence of the lovers from the brush—all these constitute as daring a scene as one who is interested in the permanence of moving pictures cares to witness. Of course, the director will point to the climax as his vindication—the slaying of the lover by Thorold, followed by the swallowing of the fatal draught by the successful duellist and the collapse and death of the sister when Thorold, already dying, breaks to her the story of the killing.

In hands less skillful than those of Biograph the "Blot in the 'Scutcheon" would be impossible. In the hands of Biograph it is worth going a distance to see.

The Lubin forces have been materially strengthened by the addition of May Buckley. So, also, has the picture screen been fortified against the criticisms of those who say the present popularity of the amusement is ephemeral. Such critics fail to take account of the fact that the standard of picture actors is steadily improving—that the skilled forces trained in the studios are being constantly augmented by the secession of good actors from the "legitimate."

Of Miss Buckley it may be said that she charms. While many actresses may seem more suited to play the part of those in humbler station, Miss Buckley is better adapted to the drawing room than to the kitchen. The writer has seen Miss Buckley in but one play—of her work in that he will confess he was enthusiastic.

Some of the companies are running, in reduced type, on each scene title the name of the play. This is a splendid idea. Oftentimes the name of the play, when given but once, will slip the mind of the beholder. The continual repetition of it "drives it in."

Speaking of title screens, there are still too few of the manufacturers who print at the opening of the film the programme of the play—the characters and the names of the principals. One or two show pictures of principals and names—which is still better. There is no reason why manufacturers should not take every reasonable means to acquaint the followers of pictures with the members of their company. There is every reason why they should. The time is coming when the identity and personality of photoplayers will be as interesting to picturegoers as are the identity and personality of the stage actors to theatergoers. Some of the manufacturers circularize the exhibitors with the photographs of their players. Very well so far as it goes. But these methods do not reach the patrons of the industry—and their personal interest is worth having and sustaining.

Witnessing last week an old Pathe weekly—it may have been 1911, 34: it was interesting, anyway—the thought occurred: Would it be an altogether bad plan to print on the play title and following scene titles the date of the release of the play—say, for instance, 2, 14, 12? This would inform every one who saw that picture that it was put on the market on February 14, 1912. Then if, in July of 1914, some exchange man should have the nerve to palm off this film on an exhibitor, and the exhibitor should have the nerve to throw it on the screen, his people would know just the extent of the imposition. It would be of no practical value to put the date on the initial title alone—for your foxy exchangeman would cut out that part of the old film—if it were not already worn out.

This may seem exaggerated. You may say films do not survive two years. But they do, and the people who are forced to look at them realize they are taking all sorts of hazards with their eyesight. The dating of films would protect the picturegoer, and it would protect that manufacturer who would prefer to be judged by his current product rather than to be damned possibly by early crudities.

It seems at least odd these days to see Arthur Johnson, the unusually popular Lubin leading man, and Marion Leonard playing a backwoods knife-cutting film melodrama. The writer ran into a Reliance reel in a downtown house the other day in which one of the leaders of the actors in the Licensed field was playing opposite to one of the leaders of the actresses in the Independent ranks. "The Trapper's Daughter" was the subject. By the way, are either of the just mentioned doing any backwoods stunts these days? Did you say: "No; they don't have to?"

Why do not the older manufacturers go over their files, pick out some of their marked successes now so long off the market as to be new to the majority of present-day picturegoers, and let us renew acquaintance with them? Better by far a good, old story than an indifferent—or worse—new one. Who would not again enjoy such films as Edison's "Bootle's Baby" or Pathe's "Robert the Silent"?

Here is an Italian translation of a scene title, the exact meaning of which your guess may be as good as another's: "I had to kill her. You had usurped me a sacred right."

The coming of Bernhardt and Rejane, filmed in "Camille" and "Sans Gene," will certainly arouse a great deal of interest among all followers of the stage, of the speaking perhaps even more than of the silent. None will be more interested watchers of these two great Frenchwomen than the greater American actors, who will probably lament the fact that the conditions and proscriptions of their employment debar them from sending down to posterity examples of their best work.

From these two films, supplemented by the widely heralded "Odyssey," should come material benefit to the industry in this country. The public will be still further and better educated in the possibilities of the silent drama; and it will manifest a keener and more discriminating interest in the comparative merits of the product of domestic manufacturers.

In one of the Fouteenth Street houses on Lincoln's birthday the projector was operated so rapidly that any possible pleasure in witnessing the show was out of the question. There is no getting away from it: An exhibitor who, simply because he has a crowded and crowding house, jumps his reels through in half time, is taking money under false pretenses. He may get away with it for a while, but not for always. The public is getting wiser.

A $300,000 PHOTOPLAY HOUSE FOR CANADA.

Announcement has been made to the effect that the Quebec nusement Company, of Montreal, Can., has purchased the operty on the West side of Bleury Street, situated between Catherine and Ontario Streets, for the sum of $199,200, d is contemplating the establishing of the most palatial otion picture theater in the world.

The Quebec Amusement Company has been greatly en- uraged since the phenomenal success of its Nickel Theater, ich proved a gem ever since its opening and is now going o the photoplay theater game stronger than any exhibitor s yet. A seating capacity of between 2,500 and 3,000 is ntemplated, with a fascinating and spacious lobby, so that e crowds may be easily handled both in entering and leav- g. Numerous wide exits, all in struct conformity with e rigid requirements of the new building laws, will be pro- led with the latest automatic devices, insuring the safety their many patrons.

Mr. H. W. Conover, who has had a remarkable and lengthy perience in the promotion of various amusement enter- ses, will be manager. When this structure is complete it l cost about $300,000. It is also understood that other ture houses will be established in Ottawa, Toronto and innipeg which will be the antithesis of the Montreal house d will cost about as much.

AUSTRALIAN PICTURE MAN IN NEW YORK.

Mr. C. Spencer, the Australian motion picture magnate, s been in New York City for the past week. Mr. Spencer's dquarters are in Sydney, Australia, where he maintains a ge rental exchange and operates a circuit of picture thea- s. Mr. Spencer's visit to New York is for the purpose of eping in touch with American picture progress. He is accompanied by Mrs. Spencer and is also enjoying some of pleasures the big town affords.

KIMMEL'S NEW CAIRO HOUSE.

Travis A. Kimmel, proprietor of the Bijou, Cairo, Ill., has purchased the three-story brick building, 217-219 Eighth Street, and will have the structure razed to the ground and will erect thereon a model theater which, when completed, will be absolutely perfect in every detail. Mr. Kimmel will be the sole owner of the theater, which will cost him when finished about $45,000.

He has instructed his Chicago architects to pay strict attention to the matter of ventilation, not depending alone on air ducts and big exhaust fans but to install a sufficient number of ozonizers guaranteed to supply his patrons with all necessary oxygen.

He has not as yet decided upon the character of amusement that he will offer the public in his new venture, but is having the theater constructed to meet any condition that the future may present, be it motion pictures, vaudeville or small theatrical shows. The house will have a seating capacity on the lower floor of 475, while the mezzanine balcony will accommodate an additional 275, making a total of 750. Mr. Kimmel is now searching the country, through the medium of Uncle Sam's mails, for all the latest novelties and features that can be advantageously utilized in theatrical construction.

BERNHARDT FILMS FOR SPANISH AMERICA.

Mr. John D. Tippitts has left New York for a tour to Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rica and the West Indies in the interests of the famous photoplays, Bernhardt in "Camille" and Rejane in "San Gene," whose North American rights are owned by the French-American Film Company of New York. So many inquiries for the rights in these countries have been received by the French-American Film Company that it thought best to send Mr. Tippitts to negotiate with the numerous bidders on the ground.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"WHEN THE HEART CALLS" (Reliance).

An odd love tale this, although quite within the bounds of probability. The theme is based upon the misplaced love of a high-strung, morbid young man. He fell in love with another man's wife, the lady being several years older than himself. She did not take him or his love seriously, and when she told him that he was wasting his time making love to her, the young man became demonstrative. He went away vowing that he would lead a life of solitude.

The lovesick youth repaired to his room and wrote her a complaining letter confirming his decision of becoming a hermit. When the lady received this letter she turned it over to her husband. The husband was inclined to pity the young man and called upon him with the intention of giving him some fatherly advice. But the young man would not listen.

Scene from "When the Heart Calls" (Reliance).

After a lapse of ten or a dozen years we find that the impulsive youth had really become a hermit and lived alone in a one-room cottage somewhere in the country. One day the lady in question with her husband and daughter, who had now grown to young womanhood, arrived at this country place to spend a short vacation. While there the daughter lost her way as she was strolling about the hills and in trying to get back she sustained a severe fall over a ledge of rock. While lying there unconscious she is found by the man who had loved her mother in vain. He, of course, did not recognize her as the little girl he once had known, and he carried her to his secluded place of abode and there revived her. The girl was soon out of danger, but it appears that she had lost her memory as a result of the fall. In a locket about her neck the hermit discovered her mother's picture and then he knew who she was.

With tender care he ministered to the girl and finally sent her safely home in the care of a young huntsman. Still the girl had not regained her memory, nor did she regain it until an operation was performed upon her head. When the young lady was well again she remembered the face she had seen in her dreams and heard a silent call from the silent man. The girl's parents in anxiety went with her and she led them to the hermit's lodge, where a great surprise was in store for them, and, no doubt, a future full of happiness for the strangely mated pair; for the call she had heard was "The Call of the Heart."

The story carries the interest well and the photography shows an improvement over Reliance work, which, as a rule, has been very good. The scenario of this picture was written by Hazel B. Hubbard, also author of "The Better Man."

On March 16, in connection with "Bedelia's 'At-Home,'" the Reliance Company will release a half reel natural history subject dealing with the alligator. Scenes showing how the alligator is raised from the age of six months to two hundred and twenty-five years will give the spectator a good idea of what this reptile is like.

"EYES THAT SEE NOT" (Rex).

A labor story told in the usual and able Rex way. The contrast between capital and labor is set forth in an extremely telling manner. It is a picture that changes back and forth many times from luxury to poverty and leaves a vivid distinction between these two classes in the mind of the beholder. The types are strong and firmly drawn. There is no doubt for an instant as to what side any of the various characters belong. As a picture it has a masterful dash to it, somewhat similar to the virility that characterizes John Sargent's bold paintings, and lifts them above the rest. It is broad, clean-cut and alive.

The story in substance deals with a wealthy mill-owner and his family, apparently living in some small steel-making town. From the veranda of this man's home the mills are visible in the distance. As the capitalist and his family are enjoying life in their luxurious way, a mob of mill-workers comes below the balcony in the evening and demands some consideration of their unsatisfactory condition. The young mill-owner shows decisively that their troubles do not interest him. The condition of the workmen is then shown in a very admirable way. There are small indignation meetings being held outside the home of one of their leaders. Inside, this man's child is lying at the point of death without means at hand for providing food or medical attention.

Scene from "Eyes That See Not" (Rex).

The women decide to take a hand in the matter and in a body they go to the mill-owner's mansion. As they peer through the windows, three of their number, as a committee, make bold to enter the sumptuous parlor and knock upon the dining-room door. The millionaire and his wife are entertaining some friends in lavish manner, entirely forgetful of the state of affairs among the poor. The butler informs the magnate of what is happening and he orders the butler to eject them from the house, which he does.

Scene from "Eyes That See Not" (Rex).

Meanwhile affairs at the home of the sick child are desperate. Unable to see his child suffer further the father determines to go alone to the mill-owner's house and plead for some sort of assistance. He meets the steel man's wife upon the balcony and sets forth his woes. This lady considers his advances an insult. She is frightened by his excited manner and in trying to push him away from the place, accidentally topples him over the railing and he falls heavily to the ground. Her husband coming just then she tells him what she has done and is exceedingly sorry that it should have occurred. The wounded mill-worker is carried to his home by his friends in a very serious condition and it begins to look as though there would be violence before long. Soon after this the mill is destroyed by an explosion. Meanwhile the magnate's wife remembers snatches of the man's story and becomes repentant. She persuades her husband to go with her to visit the injured man, and they arrive soon at his cottage, taking with them a physician and a supply of food. In these surroundings they have an opportunity to observe the wretchedness of their employees and are convinced by what they see that these people really need what they are asking for. Their visit to the workman's quarters brings about the desired result. The scales have dropped from "Eyes that See Not."

The picture is noteworthy as to acting and scenic arrangements. The characters are true, especially those of the mill-workers who look the part; that of strong, brawny men who make their livelihood by the sweat of their brows. The women also are typical of their class, being strong and vigorous like the men. The work of Mr. Smalley and Miss Weber, as the millionaire and his wife, forms a very forcible contrast to that of the other characters. The picture has a grip that holds from beginning to end. At this particular time when labor troubles are a very live topic, this picture can be featured heavily. It is fair to both sides and endeavors to teach a moral. The moral appears at the end, in type form. This is a new and clever idea of the Rex Company. Hereafter many of their plays will be followed by the printed moral of the story which will be distinctly labeled as such.

RARE GAUMONT PRODUCT.

In last week's issue of the Moving Picture World was published a brief story of "The Margrave's Daughter," a beautiful hand-colored subject to be released Saturday, April 6th, by the Gaumont Company. This picture is based upon an incident in mediaeval days, when knighthood was in flower.

Scene from "The Margrave's Daughter" (Gaumont).

All the pomp and glory of armored knight enters into the composition of the picture, the effects being heightened by the rich coloring for which the Gaumont Company is famous. The story concerns the love affair of Genevieve, daughter of the Margrave, with Captain Christian, a knight of great fame and prowess. The scene given herewith tells something of the richness of this production.

PREPARING "THE SEWER" FOR PRODUCTION (Solax).

"The Sewer," a big melodramatic production, was written by Henri Menessier, of Beaux Arts, and produced by Edward Warren. M. Menessier is the Solax scenic artist. The story is an underworld romance revolving about a gang of organized crooks, a child whom they have in training and a wealthy member of society, who unwittingly is lured to their den and is shorn of his personal possessions. Following the adage that "dead men tell no tales," the gang lowers the gentleman down through a trap door, there to perish. But the Oliver Twist of the gang secretly makes known to the hero a means of escape.

The gentleman finds himself after he had been lowered down through the trap door in a narrow, vaulted cellar. There by means of a sharp instrument given to him by the youngster he is enabled to loosen up the ropes which bind his hands and feet. Following his secret instructions, t gentleman finds an outlet which leads him into the sewe under the city. Here he is attacked by rats and encounte filth and slime, refuse and noxious gases, more deadly than t worst criminals.

Sewers, trap-doors, vaults and other underworld devices h to be built in the studio Menessier worked unceasingly f several weeks building and painting the sets. Even the rats h to be bought and tamed so that they may follow the instructio coming through Edward Warren's megaphone.

Building the sewer and the narrow channels and its tributar and overhead structures and getting exact perspectives were t most difficult parts of the production. For several weeks a dit around the studio grounds was in process of construction. good deal of trouble was experienced with the ditch after it w filled with water. On one occasion it was absorbed by the sa and on another occasion the frost froze it up into a solid ca of ice, much to the chagrin of hard-working Menessier. Ever thing was constructed with care and close attention to detail.

CHAMPION FEATURES.

The Champion Film Company has a genuinely funny pi ture in its "Ireland and Israel," which was reviewed in previous issue. "Abie," who represents Israel, is a comed Jew character whose antics in the boxing ring will get mar laughs. In later years when success has perched upon hi "Abie" reveals another side of his character that will touc sympathetic chords.

Under the title of "Kid Canfield" the Champion gives pictured expose of the devices and methods used by pr fessional gamblers to fleece their victims. This subject ha been done in two reels. The first is supposed to tell th life history of "Kid Canfield." According to the story he wa cast out of his home because of his gambling propensities Years afterward he is operating a gambling joint and young man, having been stripped of all his money by th "Kid," commits suicide in the place. The victim proves t be "Kid Canfield's" brother, whereupon the "Kid" reform and swears to devote the rest of his life to the exposure o the tricks of his nefarious trade. The subject is one that wil attract considerable attention.

"WAR'S HAVOC" (Kalem).

The Kalem Company continues to offer its interesting war pictures. The latest, which will be released at an early date, is entitled "War's Havoc," said to be based upon an incident of the Civil War and features two civil war locomotives (count 'em), a collision between those engines upon a bridge and a pretty girl jumping from one of the engines into the river just before the collision occurs. There's material enough for the most ambitious advertiser. In addition the Kalem Company will furnish a six-piece orchestration with this subject.

The beginning of the picture is the wedding festivities at a southern home, the occasion being the marriage of Captain Faulkner, C. S. A., and Jennie McPherson. News is received of the fall of Sumpter and Captain Faulkner hastens to the front. A year later Captain Faulkner and his regiment are quartered near his home. Word is received that the Federal troops are coming by rail, so the Confederates break camp and retreat. Two old style wood burning engines drawing gondolas laden with soldiers appear. The soldiers go into camp and the officers take possession of the mansion. Mrs. Faulkner manages to learn of the plans of the Federals and sends a servant to inform her husband, whose regiment has gone into concealment near by.

Scene from "War's Havoc" (Kalem).

Next day the greater part of the Federal force leaves to attack a town ten miles away and, while they are away, the Confederates attack and capture the remaining detachment. While this is happening word is sent to the Federals of the attack and they return. Fearing that her plans may be frustrated by the return of the Federals, Mrs. Faulkner and her servant compel the engineer of the remaining engine to drive his engine ahead. They meet the returning engine on the railroad bridge and a collision occurs, which blocks the way, thus saving the day for her husband. Mrs. Faulkner and the servant jump from the locomotive just before the collision occurs and escape in safety.

AMERICAN PRODUCES SOME REMARKABLE INTERIORS.

On Monday, April 1, the American Film Mfg. Company will release a remarkable picture entitled "The Maid and the Man." Aside from the story itself, which is decidedly better than the ordinary, motion picture fans will be dumbfounded at the remarkable interior settings the story contains. Instead of attempting to stage these wonderful interiors in the American's studio at La Mesa, it was decided to obtain permission from the management of the Hotel Del Coronado to stage all interior scenes in that famous hostelry. The result is a bewildering array of settings whose equal have certainly never before been seen in motion pictures—for the reason that no manufacturer has or could obtain facilities for the productions. The first scenes are staged in and around the beautiful botanical gardens and grounds of the Del Coronado. Later they are shifted to the sun parlors, writing rooms, etc. Hence, the actual rooms of the famous Del Coronado will be shown just as thousands of tourists have seen them in real life.

RELIANCE CO. WILL GIVE AUTHORS CREDIT.

If a scenario is worth while making into a photoplay, the author of it is himself worth while, and should be given credit publicly. That is the conclusion arrived at by the Reliance Motion Picture Company of New York. In other branches of artistic work, such as fiction, music, illustrating, acting, sculpture, baseball, etc., the individual is recognized. Business doesn't seem to suffer on that account. To be sure some youngster occasionally makes a hit and commands big money, but what of that? The man who discovered him should not complain about ingratitude. He didn't hire him as a genius. He did not expect anything more than average ability, for which he agreed to pay an average salary. Scenario writers have been unacknowledged by film makers for fear they will get a swelled head and want more money. Actors ditto. Yet when any of them show superior merit they are hired away by some other company just the same. Even though names are suppressed the "other fellow" finds them out and offers more money, so what's the use?

One well-known film company, sometimes referred to as the "Sphinx," had a stock company of actors that won the admiration of the world. They withheld all names and paid small salaries. Within a year the greatest company of film actors ever known was scattered. Every one became a star for some rival company; receiving much publicity and five times the salary. That company has never been the same. Their reputation stands on their early work and they have never done anything quite like it since. Recently they hired one of their former actresses back again at a very handsome figure compared with what she was getting when she left them. Any company that will not pay an artist his due, and withholds his name for parsimonious reasons, is simply advertising its policy, which is "Something for Nothing."

If the companies do not reveal the names of their art workers, the artists will reveal it themselves. That fact stands to reason. It applies to authors as well as actors. An author's name on a film is encouragement to the author. He is apt to remain loyal to the firm that develops him and uses him right. If he begins to turn out notable plays he is apt to ask for more money. Why shouldn't he? If his plays at the end of a year are responsible for increased sales, why should his pay not be increased? If his plays make a film company famous why should not the author become famous?

The question resolves itself into that old proposition, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." No man can hog the profits of another man's brain and get away with it long. Human nature doesn't work that way and that's why the scenario writer will soon get what is coming to him. The work requires brains, and men of brains will always come out on top, regardless of the machinations of men who are following a principle that is not fundamental.

"THE TRAMP'S GRATITUDE" (American).

A tramp, a thieving watchman and a kind-hearted foreman of a lumber company supply the essentials for an American picture to be released March 21 under the title of "The Tramp's Gratitude." The foreman takes pity on the poor old tramp and gives him a job. The tramp is grateful and manages to get wise to the thieving practices of the night watchman. So, when the foreman is charged with the theft of lumber from the mill, with the circumstances against him, the tramp comes to the front with information which clears the foreman and convicts the watchman. It is a well-told story.

Scene from "A Tramp's Gratitude" (American).

AMERICAN HAS FAST CAMERA LENS.

The new studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company is rapidly nearing completion. It promises to be one of the really fine studios of the country where production of any magnitude may be staged. It is the last part of the American's new factory, located at North Edgewater, Chicago, to be completed.

In every case, the latest and most improved devices were used. Contrary to custom the studios have been made in triangular shape, the camera man to occupy the niche where both side walls meet. Roof and sides are covered with a special glass whose diffused rays are expected to add considerably to the photographic results.

Probably the most interesting feature of the new studio is a new lens, never before used in any sort of photographic work, which has developed the astonishing speed of F 1.9, in optical terms which is several times faster than the most optimistic ever dreamed of. Among those manufacturers anxious to secure the best results the lens now in use is considered the fastest in the world. This operates at a speed of F 3.5 Hence, it will be seen that the American's new lens will be a distinct novelty.

In experimental work the new lens was used with gratifying results at 5:30 P. M. in the evening of a February day. The pictures were sharp, brilliant and in every way most satisfactory. No special lighting devices will be required in the American's new studio if this new lens lives up to its present record.

UNIQUE OPERATOR'S BOOTH.

Readers of the Moving Picture World are familiar with the unusual success that has attended Mr. J. D. Williams, the enterprising American who invaded Australia some two or three years ago, taking with him the American idea of the continuous picture show. Since that time Mr. Williams has built many successful picture theaters and the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, Ltd., is now conceded to be the biggest interest in Au tralian picture affairs, with branches in Sydney, Melbourne, Br bane, Perth and Wellington.

In Melbourne Mr. Williams has built a theater that is consi ered the most expensive picture theater in the world. It called the Melba and $165,000 was spent in its erection. Th theater is famous throughout Australia for its projection. (this end of the picture business Mr. Williams has spent a gre deal of thought. Usually the projection booth in a picture the ter is a ramshackle affair built to comply with the fire laws, b with no concern for its appearance, as the unsightly devices be seen in almost any American picture theater will testify.

In this point, however, Mr. Williams has produced somethi quite out of the ordinary, as a glance at the accompanying illu tration will prove. An explanation is necessary to make cle just what the picture represents. One might think that it w some kind of an airdome, but it is not. The little Swiss chal in the background of the picture is the operation room of t Melba. It is placed in the rear of the first balcony with a scen background simulating a scene in the Alps. Two Powers Can eragraphs have been installed in this unique "booth," projectir through the windows of the chalet.

This is but one of the many efforts of the J. D. Williams Con pany to make its theaters attractive upon the inside as well on the outside. Mr. Williams does not believe that all th money should be spent upon the exterior of a theater, but th the interior should be made so comfortable and pleasing th patrons will come again. This is a plan that might well be co sidered by many American exhibitors.

The Powers Cameragraph, by the way, is used exclusively i all the houses of the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, Ltd the sole agent for which, in Australia, is the Internationa Film Exchange, a subsidiary of the Williams Company.

We are informed that W. J. Sirk has sold the Crystal Thea ter in Union City, Indiana, and will open the old Lyceum in North Manchester, Indiana, under the name of The Ger

"THE SPANISH CAVALIER" (Edison).

Delving into poetry and romance, the Edison players have pro- ced a charming picture entitled, "The Spanish Cavalier," the bject having been selected by the well-known song of the same le. The period in which this picture is set is that of the fif- enth century, during the Spanish inquisition. A beautiful ñorita is loved by a Spanish cavalier. A nobleman of high gree smitten with her charms, seeks her for hmself. Failing his desires he has her accused of heresy and condemned by e inquisition. An old Friar interferes in behalf of the girl d her lover and succeeds in rescuing her from prison at the st of his own life.

Scene from "A Spanish Cavalier" (Edison).

The story is beautifully told in pictures and many delightful nes have been secured. The excellent acting of the Edison yers in this picture does much to enhance its value. The otography is also of excellent quality. This picture will be eased April 9th.

"IS HE ELIGIBLE?" (Edison).

The Edison Company offers a high class comedy for April 10th der the title, "Is He Eligible?" There are a number of very eresting and amusing situations in this picture and the acting especially good. According to the story, Charles Reed has st been elevated to the position of junior member of his father's n. He is duly installed in office and discovers that he is in ed of a stenographer. About the same time he is introduced o society where he meets a young woman of fashion and her ther and father. He likes the girl first-rate and she is appar- ly interested in him. The father is not over-particular, but mother is cautious and before she will commit herself, she ermines to have the young man properly investigated, where- on she engages the service of a private detective agency, which ails one of its lady detectives to investigate the young man. e detective applies for the position of stenographer and is duly gaged. As she is pretty and bright, it is not surprising that the young man should become interested in her, but in doing so he loses interest in the young society lady, whom he neglects.

Finally, having received a favorable report from the detective agency upon the social standing of young Reed, he is invited by the girl's mother to visit them. About the same time that the young man calls, the young lady from the detective agency, who is also Reed's stenographer, comes to collect $300 for services in investigating the young man. The woman refuses to pay the bill, whereupon the agency hands it over to the young man who is rather disgusted to find that it was for the investigation of his own character. He informs the society woman that he will take care of the bill himself and also announces his personal interest in the young lady detective who made the investigation, leaving the family in a state of high excitement over the outcome of their schemes.

"THE FIGHTING CHANCE" (Nestor).

A very dramatic picture in which, by very skilful management of those elements that awaken interest in and sympathy for a character on the screen, we are kept with warm feeling for the man who had only a fighting chance; the one-time criminal, the man whom the sheriff's posse was following, and we have an increasing hatred for this man's partner, the man who betrayed him, the man who was at bottom a real villain.

Mr. Jack Conway plays the man who was "wanted" by the law, but who really desired to get somewhere where he could live "on the square." Mr. George Gebhart plays the villain. It is a fight picture, not a chase picture, and it surely gets over. When any of its players need to run she or he runs hard, as hard as possible, and when there is a struggle on, that struggle is made fierce. Because of this the story, which is very interesting as soon as the situation is stated, increases in intensity to the climax which is a thrilling ending.

When the picture opens, we discover the two partners, one longing for a better life, the other a drunkard and gambler. The gambler soon shows that he is aware that his partner had committed some crime and that reward has been offered for his arrest. Disgruntled because his partner is not in sympathy with his ways, the gambler hastens away to the sheriff's and betrays him. While the posse is on its way to the cabin, the man they want is calmly packing up his belongings, preparing to leave. He writes a note for his partner.

Now he is on his way, but seeing the posse suspects what they want and slips aside. The cabin is searched and the posse is now on his trail when the informer happens to see a chance to steal a bag of gold dust from a cabin. There follows two very strenuous struggles. The first of these is between the woman, wife of the miner, and the man; but the partner, being near in hiding, hears the sound and comes to the woman's assistance. A very fierce fight ensues. It is interrupted by the miner just before the posse arrives. This gives the hero a chance to slip away, "his fighting chance," and leaves the villain in the sheriff's hands. It is a very good melodramatic Western play, very exciting and well photographed. We place it among the features.

"A DEAD MAN'S CHILD" (In Three Reels).

n "A Dead Man's Child' the Great Northern Special Feature m Company has a story that is pregnant with startling situans working out a well connected and highly interesting drama t is logical and in sequence as to scenes and revelations.

he Count is feeble and has a premonition of an early death. makes his last will, leaving all his property to his daughter, ith, and her fiance, Baron Sternberg. The Count has a friend Pendleton, a villain who lives in an adjoining house. The unt visits Pendleton by the means of a secret passageway been the two residences, and tells Pendleton that in the event his daughter dying without issue his vast estate will revert to ndleton. On his return to his house the Count sustains a fall vn the stairway and is seriously injured, dying in a short time er being reomved to his room.

endleton attempts to win Edith, but is repulsed. He then nives with a notorious criminal, an Oriental doctor, to put th and the Baron out of the way. At the wedding the Orial drugs a rose and Edith is reduced to a comatose state. er the villain, by means of a secret panel, administers a drug ner medicine and she is supposed to be dead.

The Struggle on the Train.

he Oriental and Pendleton remove Edith from the vault and vey the unconscious girl to the house of Pendleton. She overs a plan to take her to Constantinople and she scratches a sage on the window of her prison with the diamond in her . The body is missed from the vault and the Baron places matter in the hands of a celebrated detective, Newton. Newplaces himself in the bed usually occupied by the Baron and Oriental attempts his life by means of a knife through a et panel, but is frustrated. There is a fight in the basement Pendleton and the doctor make their escape with the girl and d a train bound for Constantinople. Newton and his posse e at the railroad station just in time to see the train train ppear.

ne officers press a fast automobile into service and drive furiy across country and arrive at a bridge ahead of the train. ton drops from the overhead bridge onto the roof of a tly moving car, exchanges clothing with the guard, and enters compartment which contains Edith and her captors. As ton enters he is recognized by the doctor and a furious ggle ensues. They fight out onto the platform of the swiftly ing car, each trying to throw the other from the train. ton, by a superhuman effort, forces his man to the steps and hurled from the train. It is one of the most exciting incis ever shown. The Oriental is seen trying to rise and then back—dead. Newton hurries to the compartment and finds guard has overpowered Pendleton.

ere is little more to be said. Edith is restored to her beed husband, who is overjoyed at finding her alive. Pendleton his just deserts and the story ends happily.

Notice to Manufacturers of Moving Pictures

AT the annual convention of the "National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees" held in Niagara Falls, N. Y., during July, 1911, a resolution was adopted instructing their executive board to communicate with the manufacturers of moving pictures and respectfully request that members of the I. A. T. S. E. be employed to construct all scenery, scenic effects, properties, etc., and the setting thereof, used in the production of moving pictures.

By the employment of members of the I. A. T. S. E. you are assured of the very highest class of skilled workmanship in all lines of construction. This, in conjunction with the fact that your film is being projected by operators, members of the I. A. T. S. E., should doubly assure its perfection, on completion and exhibition on the screen.

Capable men in all branches will be furnished upon application to our offices or our representative will call at your request.

Respectfully,
Jos. L. Meeker, Cor. Sec.,

PORTLAND, OREGON.

Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Company, went to Pendleton last week to close a deal for the building of a new motion picture theater on the best corner in town with a seating capacity of 500. Work will start at once and will be completed within ninety days.

Work will commence almost immediately on a new suburban theater for the People's Amusement Company at Sunnyside. The new house will seat 700, and will be completely equipped. This house will tap one of the largest and most populous residential districts in Portland.

Governor West, of Oregon, has personally supervised the making of about ten sets of pictorial slides on the work of the state institutions. These are being used throughout the state in the theaters of the People's Amusement Company.

Pendleton has two theaters using Licensed pictures exclusively and both are doing a satisfactory business.

The Portland Advisory Board of Censhorship has published its annual report, and among other things the chairman stated that the standard of pictures had greatly improved during the past year. They paid a high compliment to the local exchanges for co-operation in uplifting methods.

Joe Baum has bought a half interest in the three reel "Zigomar" and will tour the state with the piece. It is understood that Leeser Cohen has secured the Cregon rights for "Homer's Odyssey," and that he will also book and play this attraction all over Oregon.

Through the efforts of Melvin G. Winstock, the Pathe firm has agreed to send a force of camera men to Portland in June to take pictures of the Rose Festival, which is the leading event of the year on the Pacific Coast and in the entire Northwest.

Two more big houses are planned for Portland, one on Eleventh and Washington and another at Fourth and Washington, the former to be a 10-cent house and the latter a 5-cent theater.

Mr. George Ellwood, for the past year manager of the Oh Joy Theater, Partland, has been transferred to the Grand Theater, The Dalles.

"Zigomar" in three reels was a leading feature at the Majestic Theater in Portland, and drew splendid crowds. It is a very attractive film, and will play a return date here soon.

Another moving picture theater that will seat 320 persons is being built in the Rose City Park district. The theater is to have a main facade of tapestry brick with ornamental coping and cornice finished in white enamel. A large marquise with art-glass panels and dome will give the entrance the appearance of a high-class theater of a larger size. The cost will be about $6,500. This district is a high-class residential section of Portland.

From letters received here it would appear that Miss Florence Turner may shortly appear in all of the houses of the People's Amusement Company throughout the state of Oregon. A great motion picture event will be made of her forthcoming visit.

To the high school student writing the most acceptable story of "Julius Caesar," the essays to be judged by the city editors of the daily newspapers, Manager Winstock, of the People's Theater, will present a complete set of Shakespeare's Works beautifully bound. To the students of English literature this will indeed be an acceptable gift, and cannot fail to cause every student who witnesses the picture, to take a new start and work harder toward a proper comprehension of this great work. There are no restrictions placed on students. All that is necessary is that they be bona fide high school pupils and that they witness the film, which promises to be out of the ordinary.

At the last meeting of the Operators Union it decided to increase the initation fee to fifty dollars; it was formerly five.

The Apollo Theater, Twenty-second and Cambria Streets, opened on March 2 under the management of Adolph Bonnem.

Otto Miller, of this city, was putting up a sign at a moving picture house in Chester, Pa., which he owns, when he fell from a ladder and received injuries to his hip and leg that required his removal to the Chester Hospital.

The Federal Moving Picture Parlor, Eleventh and Federal Streets, Camden, N. J., has changed hands. Several of the picture houses in Camden are holding benefits for local baseball teams.

The Lyric Theater, No. 728 Girard Avenue, has been compelled to put on vaudeville to meet the demands created by opposition houses.

On a charge of infringing on a moving picture copyright, George W. Brandenburg, No. 233 North Eighth Street, was held under five hundred dollars bail for Court by United States Commissioner Craig on March 1, on the complaint of the Great Northern Film Company, through its American agent, Joseph Oes. It is alleged that Brandenburg took a film, entitled "The Ballet Dancer," which had been copyrighted by the Great Northern Company, and changed the name to "Jealousy." Portions of the film were produced at the hearing and evidence was introduced tending to show that Brandenburg had not even taken the trouble to conceal the trade mark.

Old Home Week will be celebrated at Norristown, Pa., the week of May 6. It will be also the one hundredth anniversary. The amusements will be under the direction of Spielmann & Crawford.

George Chapman has opened a picture house at the northwest corner of Orthodox and Tacony Streets, Frankford.

Deputy Factory Inspector Harry W. Honan has closed down the moving picture parlor in the Young Men's Christian Association building, declaring the encasement of the picture mechanism is an insufficient protection against fire.

Lightning struck the ticket box at the Pastime Theater, No. 1420 Point Breeze Avenue, during a terrific rainstorm on February 26 and Adam Moroney, an usher, was struck by a piece of metal from the ticket box and his eye knocked out.

The Philadelphia Theatrical Managers' Association held a banquet at the Bellevue-Stratford on February 29. Speeches were made by Director Porter, of the Department of Public Safety, and other public officials. The great work of the theater in the community; its power as an institution of social and moral uplift, its flaws and virtues, the great good it is capable of performing when guided by knowing minds, were some of the subjects discussed. This was the first dinner held by the organization in its history.

The Hicks Amusement Company has been incorporated in Camden, N. J., its object to operate, manage and control any theater or theaters and exploit attractions; capital, $2,000. The incorporators are Fred G. N. Nirdlinger, Thomas M. Dougherty and George H. B. Martin.

The Messiah Protestant Episcopal Church, Broad and Federal Streets, has been sold by the sheriff as a result of foreclosure on a judgment for $25,921.33, and will be turned into a vaudeville and moving picture theater. The property was sold a year ago to a syndicate who planned to build a theater on the site, but the diocesan authorities refused to ratify the sale on account of the purpose for which it was to be used. The purchaser was Albert M. Greenfield.

The Lochiel Hotel, Harrisburg, Pa., which has been a hotel since 1837, has closed its doors and will be remodeled into a theater with a small hotel in front.

Another new picture house will be opened at Norristown, Pa., by John Lauro. Two theaters closed there recently, but Mr. Lauro is very enthusiastic over his venture.

Messrs. A. and L. Sablosky have bought the State rights of Pennsylvania and New Jersey for Madame Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille," and Madame Rejane in Madame Sans-Gene, made by the French-American Film Company.

Bids are being received for making alterations for the Grand Amusement Company, No. 5206 Market Street. The Theater will be completely renovated and put in up-to-date style. The Grand Company recently took over this house.

Mayor Farner, of Burlington, N. J., has issued an edict directing proprietors of places of amusement to rigidly observe the State law prohibiting the presence of children under sixteen years of age in such resorts without adult escorts. Policemen are stationed at the entrance of all picture houses and report any violation of the act.

The largest theater in this city excepting the Metropolitan Opera House will be erected in the vicinity of Broad and Erie Avenue by George S. Steumpfig and his son, Dr. Walter Steumpfig, proprietors of the Germantown Theater. The new house will show vaudeville and pictures and will cost $250,000, and will have a seating capacity of 3,600. The exact site will be known within the next week or ten days.

The Northwestern Theater, Broad and Erie Avenue, is to be completely remodeled and rebuilt. The seating capacity of the house will be increased from 1,000 to 2,500. The new theater will occupy the site of the present house with other ground adjoining, and will cost in the neighborhood of $150,000.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

LOUISVILLE.

Bad weather has hurt attendance somewhat, but not sufficiently to worry owners.

Fred Dolle and Jose Stuerle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, have conceived a unique scheme and it has already been put into effect among a number of theaters. Coupons are sold to grocers and others, the latter giving one to each purchaser of a 25-cent article. Each of the coupons entitles the holder to one cent toward an admission ticket to any of the ten theaters. The buyer of $1.25 worth of goods is thereby given a ticket to any of the houses who are members of the Associated Theaters. The following have joined the circuit: The Hopkins, East Broadway, Orpheum, Preston, Crown, Casino, Globe Columbia, Clifton, and Baxter. With the exception of Preston and Clifton, all of the houses are ated by the Princess and Broadway Amuse Companies. So far the plan has met with fla ing success.

The Orpheum Theater, which was recently out of commission by fire in adjoining build has resumed operations, following the renov of the house. It is owned by the Princess Am ment Company. The rate of five cents preva in other theaters owned by the Princess has put into effect. The former staff of the Orph was on hand and the theater at once resume place in public estimation. Harry Brown, of the best known singers of Louisville, is so at the Orpheum, succeeding Cy Reinhart. Brown sang at Hopkins for two seasons and g a big following during that time.

Another moving picture house has been adde Louisville's list, the Clifton, located at Fran and Belleaire Avenues. The new house was especially for a moving picture theater and seat about 700 persons. Its capacity was te during the opening day. Prices of five and cents will prevail, the former applying to chil only. Robert L. Lucas is president of the Cli Amusement Company, also owning the lar holding of stock. The Clifton will operate at night, except on Sunday, when matinees be given. Thursday has been set aside as ama night, and prizes will be given to the winn The theater has six exits, despite the fact tha is practically fireproof. Independent films will shown.

Louis J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic T ter, Fourth Street, near Chestnut, turned his house over to the Kentucky Children's Welfare sociation recently for a moving picture lect Miss Anna L. Strong, of Chicago, director of m exhibits in the interests of children, lectu while moving pictures, showing conditions of dren in factories, playgrounds, homes, schools streets were thrown on the screen. The Maje has increased its attendance recently by brin back "Zigomar," the famous detective story, request. Many Louisvilleians failed to see film on its first visit, and accordingly Man Dittmar secured it for a second time.

Robert Jacobstein, formerly manager of Crystal Theater, operated by the Falls C Amusement Company, has resigned that posi and joined the Kentucky & Indiana National F Exchange as chief bookkeeper.

Arthur V. Sheckler, Louisville representative the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, of Cincinnati, announced that R. J. Gomes has purchased Chanfield Booking Exchange, and the latter will merged with the Gomes Exchange. Mr. Sheck is Southern representative of the company, and booking two acts weekly for numerous Louisv moving picture houses.

The Swanson-Crawford Film Exchange, rece established in Louisville, has secured sev houses, including the Lyre, Thirteenth and Wal Streets, and two theaters in Jeffersonville, I across the Ohio River from Louisville. A. Mayer is Louisville representative of the excha His office is in the Hopkins Theater Building.

The theaters of the Falls Cities Amusement C pany have gained much good-will from its patr by allowing free admission after 10 o'clock in evening. The management realized that patr entering at that hour or shortly after would unable to see more than half of the conclud performance. Accordingly pleasure-seekers apply for tickets would be informed that the show practically over, but that they were welcome see the conclusion free of charge. While adopt this policy, the management has not advertised fearing that the element which is continually lo ing for "free doings," would become acquain with their system and work it to death. Wor quietly it has saved patrons many dimes. gained the theaters more than that in good-w Such as have benefited from the "no charge aft 10 o'clock" method have surely returned in th to see the entire show on following days.

Judge A. E. Richards, of Louisville, has decli the request of a Baltimore company for his ture. The moving picture manufacturers wished use the picture in featuring the capture of Federal pay-train by Col. John S. Mosby's men, which Judge Richards, who was a Confeder soldier, figures. The veteran, however, evaded issue and the company will make the film with his likeness.

The Colonial Amusement Company has awar contracts for its alterations in a building at Fl and Main Streets, Paris, Ky. A half dozen frent companies will work on the building sim taneously, and it is expected that it will be re for occupancy about April 15. The Colonial planning to establish a chain of theaters in ot Bluegrass towns, Paris being the opening wedge Owensboro, Ky., will have another moving p ture house shortly, Louisville capitalists having spected the ground there recently with a view entering the field. Residents are anxious for new theater and have offered inducements.

The moving picture business has been fairly sat factory in Louisville during the past week, the weather has held down attendances somewh

The Columbia Theater, operated under the a pices of the Princess Amusement Company, featured several Bison specials recently with s cess. "War on the Plains" was well receiv while "The Indian Massacre" also scored a hit.

Harry Brown, who has been rendering the vocal music at the Orpheum, the Jefferson Street theater of the Princess Amusement Company, has severed his connection with the concern and sought other fields. He has been replaced by Arthur Lawrence Herring, who came with a big reputation and who has added to it in the Gateway city by the quality of his voice. Hopkins Theater, also in the Princess circuit, has made an innovation in its affairs by changing its vaudeville bill twice weekly, instead of but once, as heretofore. The moving pictures are included in the revision. The management of the Princess has announced that a waltzing contest will be given every Monday night, following the regular show. Five dollars in gold is the reward for the winning couple, and much interest has been manifested in the plan.

A. F. Mayer, representative of the Swanson-Crawford Film Exchange in Louisville, has secured the State rights for Kentucky for the first 15 days' release of the Bison films. Mr. Mayer will probably provide film service for the Cherokee Theater in the future, the deal almost being completed.

M. Switow, head of the Falls Cities Amusement Company, has returned from Martinsville, Ind., after a two weeks' vacation, much improved in health. C. E. Hampson supervised the Falls Cities theaters during Mr. Switow's absence. The latter is contemplating the erection of a big new house in New Albany, but has not definitely decided on that step, and will not until spring.

H. R. Harrison has taken charge of the office of the Independent Film Service Company, formerly the Globe Film Exchange. Mr. Harrison has had wide experience in his line, having had charge of various offices of the Globe. He replaces R. B. Ticknor, who is now with the Louisville branch of the Standard, with offices in the Tyler Building.

"Vanity Fair," a Vitagraph film, which was seen at the new Majestic Theater recently, will play a return engagement shortly. The Hungarian Orchestra, which has popularized the theater to a great extent, has maintained its reputation lately, rendering appropriate music with the various films. It is also playing request numbers daily.

Greenstein Brothers, owners of the Dream Bijou, Market Street, near Third, are negotiating for a new manager for their house, W. F. Clark having resigned to enter another business. An experienced man will be secured to take his place.

Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, will shortly award bids for the renovation of the "Baxter," an airdome, which has been closed during the winter. Extensive improvements will be made in the house in preparation for the opening of spring and summer business. The Associated Theaters, composed of a dozen houses, which are selling tickets to business firms which in turn are giving them away as premiums, are doing a land office business and the success of the idea seems assured.

Downtown residents of Louisville were given an opportunity to see "Zigomar" recently, J. M. Wentzel presenting that film at the Norman, Twenty-first and Portland Avenue.

Arthur V. Sheckler, Louisville manager for the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, is forming a stock company for the purpose of erecting a moving picture house in Owensboro, Ky. Several business men are interested and the work on the new house will begin with the approach of spring. An option has been secured on a prominent corner of the town, which offers a big field for promotors of the animated picture game.

Maysville, Ky., will shortly be given another picture theater, Sherman Arn and J. C. Simmons having secured a lease on the White Building. Alterations will be made quickly and the theater will be ready for business about April 15, it is thought. The building will seat about 400 people. W. J. Kirwin, City Clerk of Maysville, will manage the new theater, having had experience in that line.

After listening to Health Officer Landis and Building Commissioner Rapp, of Covington, the moving picture men of that town appointed a committee to consider the requirements of the city officers. The officials insist upon the following points mainly: Proper heating and ventilation, prevention of crowding patrons into lobbies, elimination of all steps at entrance except one not to exceed eight inches, and conformance to code affecting large theaters by those houses which have vaudeville acts. The moving picture men indicated that they are anxious to comply with the laws in every respect as long as they are reasonable and their committee will doubtless recommend that step.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ENGLAND.

Through the courtesy of Mr. H. F. Campbell, manager of the Boston Film Rental Company, 665 Washington Street, the writer was present at an advance showing of the "Bison 101" two-reel subject of "The Indian Massacre." The picture was well worth seeing in every way, and is a photoplay that must be termed "big" in every sense of the word. The Thanhouser two-reel subject "Nicholas Nickleby" was also run off, and it proved itself worthy of unstinted praise.

Mr. M. T. Yack, who managed the Grand Theater, New Haven, Conn., for over two years, as resident manager for Henry B. Harris, has resigned his position. The Grand was recently given over to vaudeville and pictures, and Mr. Harris is no longer connected with the house.

During the present session of the Rhode Island legislature, a bill was introduced which provided that all kinds of theatrical amusement should not be allowed on the Lord's Day. This bill immediately drew forth fire from E. F. Albee, owner of Keith's Theater, Providence, and from a few other influential theatrical men, who do not offer motion pictures as entertainment. Sufficient pressure has been brought to bear to eliminate this bill. Another bill has been drafted in its place, which, if passed, will forbid the usual run of Sunday entertainments. It goes without saying that the new bill forbids exhibitions of photoplays. This bill was introduced to the legislatire on March 1, and at this writing has not been deciced upon.

Mr. John F. Burke, for years manager of the Worcester Theater Worcester, Mass., but who has lately been in charge of the Park Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., has been transferred back to the Worcester, and is managing the house with his usual ability.

Col. Willard G. Stanton, who has managed the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., for some time, as a vaudeville and picture house, is no longer at the helm. The Central Square recently gave up the photoplay, in order to present stock company attractions. Business didn't come quite up to expectations at the Central Square, although Colonel Stanton disagreed with the writer on this point, and wrote an open letter to the World complaining that "Henry" had the wrong dope on his house.

Mr. Ben Jackson, Manager of the Grand Opera House, New Haven, Conn., reports business to be good, and getting bigger every day. This house will be watched with great interest by New England managers, as it is being conducted by William Fox. The Grand Opera House marks the start of William Fox's invasion of New England. The usual Fox brand of vaudeville and pictures are being presented.

Frank T. Gunn is in charge of the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., succeeding Col. W. G. Stanton.

Since F. Earle Bishop has become one of the owners of the Congress Theater, Portland, Me., as well as the manager, the house has picked up wonderfully. Vaudeville is eliminated, and pictures are being shown, with a playlet to make good measure.

Keith's Theater, Campello, Mass., which opened late this fall, has already changed hands. When the change was first made last week, the house was taken over by George Rider, manager of B. F. Keith's National Theater, Boston, and by Walter H. Foster, chief operator of B. F. Keith's Bijou Dream, Boston. After a few days, Mr. Rider dropped out of the Campello house, and Mr. Foster is alone at the helm. Both Mr. Foster and Mr. Rider have left their positions in Boston.

The Union Hill Theater, Gloucester, Mass., is now using vaudeville from the Merrill Vaudeville Circuit, of Boston, in connection with its regular offerings of Independent pictures. The Union Hill is finding conditions very satisfactory, according to reliable reports.

Manager Commerford, who has been in charge of the Bowdoin Square Theater, Boston, which offers vaudeville and pictures, has resigned from that position. It is rumored that Mr. Commerford will soon be seen in charge of one of the new theaters now building in Boston, which will show vaudeville and pictures. Nothing positive can be stated, however.

There is one theater in Boston that shows pictures exclusively, and is doing a land office business. The house in mind is the theater on Washington Street, where Mr. Marson, manager of the Boston branch of the General Film Company, shows off his product to exhibitors. It is not at all unusual to see 60 men in the exhibition room, taking in the latest Licensed releases. Mr. Marson has decided to change his exhibition times from Mondays and Thursdays to Tuesdays and Fridays. The time is from 9 to 1 in the morning. This change will be welcomed by managers, as many of them found it a real hardship to be present on Monday and Thursday, due to the fact that programs are usually changed on those days and managers feel the need of remaining at their theaters. This sort of co-operation on the part of the exchange is worthy of commendation.

This brings to mind the fact that the Sales Company's product is not so easily available for advance showing to managers as the Boston Independent exchanges are not at present so situated as to make this possible. The rumor has it that this is to be taken care of and that an exhibition room for Independent exhibitors and for those interested in this product, is soon to be a fact in Boston.

Fall River, Mass., reports state that the Bijou Theater, a Marcus Loew house, may not be one of this chain very much longer, as the lease is about to expire. This report is denied by Louis M. Boas, New England representative of the Loew theaters and stationed in Boston. Manager Benson of the Bijou, reports good business.

The present session of Massachusetts legislature had a good number of bills that were aimed at theaters, some of which would have practically killed the photoplay business in that state, if passed. However, the best any of them received was a polite "leave to withdraw," while others never reached the committees, having been withdrawn before the hearings. A bill which required the presence of one fireman at all public places of amusement was killed by the committee this week, and also another aiming at the overcrowding of houses.

Dante's Inferno is still a big money maker, as was proven when Dante's Divine Comedy played a most successful engagement at the Russwin Lyceum, New Britain, Conn.

Howe's moving pictures are touted as having done the biggest Saturday matinee business ever recorded at the Court Square Theater, Springfield, Mass. Mr. Howe is unusually popular in Springfield, and this was his second engagement at the Court Square Theater within a month.

Brunswick, Me., a town that can hardly boast of a real first-class theater, is to have one very soon, as ground has been broken for the new Cumberland Theater. Work is to be rushed ahead.

Lent has had its usual influence on the photoplay theaters about New England, but the pressure is not nearly so hard as it is on the "legitimate" houses, judging from the empty seats and "paper" in the $2 theaters.

The Scenic Temple, Malden, Mass., which presents vaudeville and pictures, was the scene of considerable excitement this week, when Madeline Mack, a dancer, was severely bitten by a polar bear. Two stage hands of the Scenic Temple were also victims of the bear. The injuries to Miss Mack will not endanger her life, according to reports.

The Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., which recently forsook vaudeville and pictures for stock company attractions, is still showing photoplays on Sunday evenings. The house finds the Sunday shows very profitable.

It is possible that Boston is to have still another large theater, which will offer vaudeville and pictures. The proposed location is Tremont Row, starting with the property now occupied by Austin & Stone's Theater, and extending to the end of the block. Chicago, Ills., people have secured an option on the entire property, but it is understood that the final papers have not as yet been signed. A large house, seating 2,000 at least, is contemplated, and plans are already finished. This will be a tremendous undertaking, as the property on Tremont Row is extremely high.

Mayor Kelton B. Miller has purchased of Cebra Quackenbush of New York City, the Academy of Music in Pittsfield, Mass. The theater is located on North Street. As was noted in these columns, this entire property was practically destroyed by fire on January 28, 1912. Mayor Miller has big ideas for his new acquisition, and intends to erect a five-story brick block, which will contain a large theater and business offices and stores. The mayor intends to have the theater run under his supervision, and promises the people of Pittsfield that they can count on the best the market affords in vaudeville and pictures.

Messrs. Contos and Zevitas, owning the Zenicon Temple, Roxbury, Mass., a vaudeville and pucture house, have been doing all kinds of stunts with their theater lately. They recently leased the house to a company, but took the house back when the agreements of the transaction were not lived up to by the lessees. After running the house again for a couple of weeks, Messrs. Contos and Zevitas leased their house to Messrs. Mark and Bunce, two well-known picture men in Boston. Mr. Mark owns the Comique Theater, 95 Summer Street, Lynn, Mass., which is managed by Mr. A. L. Newhall. The Zenicon Temple was leased for a term of one year with a renewal for 4 years if desired at the expiration of the first year. The rental is $3,500 yearly, according to reliable information in the writer's possession. Mr. Bunce is an experienced manager, as is Mr. Mark, and the Zenicon Temple looks good under the new regime, even though the New Shawmut Theater is tough competition. The new owners take possession almost immediately, and may run the house as a five-cent proposition in order to compete with the Shawmut.

The Boston Traveler, a wide-awake daily newspaper, issues a rather more pretentious edition on Saturdays and motography comes in for a good bit of practical publicity each week. Under the caption "The Traveler's Moving Picture Stories," is printed the story of a current release. March 9 was the Edison's, and their "The Heir Apparent," came in for a big writeup, with 5 illustrations to attract attention. Not so very long ago, exhibitors always read the Treveler with some dread, as the editorial policy of this paper was distinctly hostile to the photoplay, and many an issue contained editorials that "knocked" pretty hard. This is changed now, and the Traveler sees many commendable things in the pictures which it mentions in its columns now and then.

In a recent issue, the writer stated that Lynn, Mass., would possibly soon possess another vaudeville and picture house. This seems to be an assured fact now, and it is stated, on reliable authority, that the B. F. Keith interests have secured a suitable location and that they will immediately start work on a fine theater, which will be fireproof and thoroughly modern throughout. The Lynn Theater is a Keith house playing vaudeville and pictures, and it has not been given out as yet as to what will be done with this theater. The new house will eclipse the Lynn Theater, and is touted that it will be the finest in Lynn, when completed.

Malden, Mass., has another theater, or rather an old one under new management. The Plaza was opened on Monday, March 11, with Licensed pictures and illustrated songs. Matinee prices will be five cents, while the evening scale will be ten cents for adults, and five for children. Mr. H. Singer is the manager, and should make good with his new proposition. The house is located on 128 Bryant Street, and has a good location.

The Bowdoin Square Theater, Boston, offering Licensed pictures and vaudeville, intends to eliminate the orchestra this week. It is rumored that this house will cut out the vaudeville it has been using, and run a straight picture show, with the admission lowered to five cents. This rumor has not been confirmed, although it started from a reliable source.

The Westminster Theater, Providence, R. I., will play vaudeville and pictures starting the first week in May. The Westminster plays high-class attractions dunring the winter, but turns to lower priced attractions during the summer reason.

The Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company opened their new theater in Northampton, Mass., this week, and found business fully up to the mark. Vaudeville and pictures are given and the shows are very big. The Goldstein Brothers operate houses in Springfield, Westfield, Easthampton and in other cities, and always seem to pick live ones, and give good value to the public.

Hathaway's Theater, Lowell, Mass., tried stock company attractions for a few weeks and found business very poor. Two weeks was enough. The new policy has not been decided upon, but the chances seem to favor vaudeville and pictures.

Mr. William Youngsten has been appointed manager of Goldstein Brothers' Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass.

The Grand Opera House, New Haven, Conn., which was lately acquired by William Fox, is without any regular house manager at present, as a successor to Mr. Yack, who ran the house for the former owners, has not as yet been appointed. The house reports good business, under the Fox system of vaudeville and pictures.

The Orpheum Theater of Brockton, Mass., will soon be showing vaudeville and pictures again, as Messrs. Bander and Fiedler have taken a lease on this house. The former is a local man, while Mr. Fiedler is a Boston man.

The Arlington Auditorium is the name of a new photoplay theater at Arlington, Mass., which was just opened by P. F. Lyon, a well known Boston picture man. Business is reported as satisfactory.

The Rev. C. H. Temple of Lewiston, Me., has introduced motion pictures into his church, and the photoplay theaters now form a regular part of the Sunday evening services. Manager William Gray, of the Mystic Theater, Lewiston, Me., is aiding the Rev. Temple in this work, giving him the benefit of his knowledge of this business. This is the first house of worship in Lewiston, Me., to introduce motion pictures and great credit is given the pastor and the church.

The Bijou Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., is doing a fine business with pictures and vaudeville under the ownership and management of Mr. Andrew Whitney. Mr. Whitney is a real old-timer and recently celebrated his eighty-sixth birthday.

The new Union Theater, Providence, R. I., opened to the public on March 9 to crowded houses. This theater is owned by Charles Allen & Son, and is estimated by the owners to have cost over $100,000. The new house offers vaudeville and pictures and has a seating capacity of well over 1,800, of which 1,200 seats are in the auditorium. It is one of the finest, most modern and up-to-date theaters in New England, built with the express purpose of exploiting vaudeville and pictures.

French's Opera House, Hyde Park, Mass., was unfortunate enough to be placed under the dangerous list by Building Commissioner Everett of Boston, because exits were insufficient in case of fire. Extensive alterations must be made before this house will be able to resume business.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Commends Harrison's Articles.

Gentlemen:—I have been a reader of your magazine for over a year and in fact ever since I became engaged in the moving picture business as an exhibitor. And from an exhibitor's standpoint, I want to congratulate you and pat you on the back, for the strong campaign you are making in an effort to raise the standard of picture plays and the talent with which they are produced.

In studying the situation from an exhibitor's standpoint, it seems to me, that because of the great demand for reels, any old thing that could be called a picture has been put together and dumped upon the unsuspecting public. Many of the pictures being in conception and in production so far beneath the intelligence of the average audience, that it is hard to realise how they could have had the nerve to put them out. Many of the makers seem to have taken a hint and are beginning the year 1912 on a new leaf, with promises to do better. I sincerely trust we may realize the fulfilment of these promises. Some of them intimate that they will be glad for suggestions from exhibitors. And as a means of obtaining results of this kind, I would suggest that they have a copy of the articles you are publishing by Louis Reeves Harrison pasted in a prominent place in their offices. And I believe that these articles represent the sentiment of at least 90 per cent. of the exhibitors over the U. S. Let the good work go on. Yours very truly,

Mancos, Colo. Geo. D. Woods, Mgr. Mancos Opera House.

Dear Sir:—Along with the enlightenment of the twentieth century, the average American citizen has grown accustomed to demanding the "best" in whatever he deserves. The makeshift, the cheap and tawdry, are losing caste pretty rapidly these days.

Above all is this true of the motion picture. Hence I cannot understand the mental process of the theater proprietor who adds to a program of three delightful photoplays, the coarse jests and clownish antics of two cheap alleged "vodeville" performers.

Surely it is nauseating to the patron who feels inclined to sit quietly by and enjoy the pictures and who does not wish his eyes and ears assaulted with the elephantine efforts of these "entertainers."

And please note that the class appealed to by proprietors in booking such monstrosities is the very class that has been the greatest impediment to the progress of the business.

For example: the other day I chanced to visit a neighborhood theater. I saw a good picture and settled back for more. Instead, there appeared upon the little stage a comedian (God save the mark!) who made a series of uncouth hops about a six-by-two platform under the impression that he was doing a clog dance. He announced it: "Ladies and Gen'lemen, wit your kind attention I will endeabor to give you an imitation of an Irish clog dance."

Whatever his sins they were hardly to be compared with the individual who followed. He was to tell some stories. Most of them were revolting and in violation of all good taste beside having no visible point so far as the audience could find. One of them centered about his difficulty in "keepin' down" an oyster supper—and that in itself was almost enough to drive the women from the theater. That particular joke "took" well, of course, with the rougher element. Men and women turned wry faces to each other in disgust. I suppose the theater proprietor—who ostensibly was to pay good currency for that act, relished it, also; otherwise he certainly would have taken that young gentleman by the neck and headed him for the door.

Suppose some family of more or less refinement had gone to that theater that particular night for the first time. They would hardly go again and would be among the first of the misguided souls who believe that the motion picture theater is a detriment to a neighborhood. Certainly I shall not again waste my time in that house. Yours for Better Things.

A Noteworthy Success.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed please find my check for $3 as per your notice, which pays to January 31, 1913.

Have found the world a great help to me in a great many ways inasmuch as I am in a small town and can't get away to look in on the big ones. In your paper I can see what the others are doing and can keep up with the times.

Am an exsalesman, put in nearly fourteen years selling groceries. Wanted to get on speaking terms with my wife so thought of the picture business, as I had no capital to speak of. Came here in December, 1908, and bought out a man who could not make it pay. Have since moved to much larger quarters, put in my own lighting plant and from what my old friends of the road say, who never fail to drop in, I have a place which would grace a much larger town.

Use Licensed service from Omaha branch G. F. Co., and ask for nothing but best class of films. Have reached out for the best class of people and they are my patrons regularly. Do my own operating and lecture my pictures which I find is a card with me.

I run one "special" each week which has been both profitable and good advertising for the theater. Ran "Auld Lang Syne" Monday, January 22, to record business; filled my house four times from 7 p. m. to 11 p. m., at advanced prices.

Have learned the business by hard work, close attention to it, and a large sized willingness to learn. Have a 10 H. P. "Special Electric" Fairbanks-Morse & Co. engine and a 7½ Kwt. generator, 110 volt; besides having all the power I need, I supply the druggist next to me with light which pays the expense of running.

Pardon my lengthy letter but as I only write once a year I want to get it all in. Any help I can give to a less experienced novice, I will gladly give, as I know how hard it is to learn from experience alone. Yours very truly.

J. A. Dundas.

Dear Sir:—The writer has since the advent of your most excellent publication been a constant reader and has read with much interest the able discussions that have been ably presented through your columns from time to time. As to the moving picture business I must say that if ever there was a trade or profession ably discussed in all its details, your paper leads all others by several lengths and then some. Every department, with the possible exception of the art of sweeping or of selling tickets, has been commented on and I look for that soon.

I have been in this business now over seven years and have always had a money making proposition, never having to sell or put on vaudeville to make ends meet, and most of my success I attribute to your paper, for many and many times I have followed the suggestions outlined in your columns and I have reached the conclusion that, next to the show, the Picture World is indispensable. I don't see how anyone can get along without it.

I have many a time "devied" with Swanson, Montgomery and other old heads during our careers under the Black Tops and elsewhere, but to reach the point that I am after is that the increased output of the Licensed factories has, in my estimation, greatly reduced the quality. Why do not the Licensed people license more manufacturers.

The Independents, on the other hand, are making great and rapid strides. The one and only drawback on the Independent side now seems to me to be their failure to tell the exhibitors their casts in the different plays. The one big asset today of the Licensed people is the fact that their stars are all known to most every picture fan. But for them, most of their pictures of late would be viewed with silence. Suppose that Misses Joyce, Gauntier, Turner, and Messrs. Anderson, Costello, Bunny and many others, should forsake the Licensed people, and, on the other hand, suppose the Independents had as many stars as widely known, what would be the result?

It's a very great mystery to me why the Independents cannot see that the one thing to boost their films is to let everyone who sees their films on the screen know who this and that character is. In much shorter time than can be realized, patrons will be calling for their stars as loud if not louder than are the shining stars today in the Licensed side of the question. I hope soon to see the day come and I believe the time not for off when an open market will be the order, and the sooner the better, for I, for one, shall ask for and demand pictures from people that exploit their stars, for once known they are liked always.

This being my first offense, I trust leniency will be shown, for I have been wanting for some time to write but my courage has hereto failed. Here's hoping it shall be a life sentence instead of murder in the first degree. Adios. Sincerely.

During the past year I have read dozens of grievances from managers, operators, actors and, last but not the least, abused (if we are to take their word for it) scenario writers.

I am a moving picture camera man with a real grievance. I know my end of the business and get results. I develop my own film and am held responsible for my own work as well as that of the darkroom employees.

The crew I work with is one of the highest priced in the business. The pay roll of the regular company is upward of one thousand dollars a week. When a large production is "put over," we may use from one to two hundred extras. Mine is the only camera used on a production that will cost over one thousand dollars. I am expected to get good results in every and any light. If anything goes wrong, I am to blame. And what do I get for this? Worry, work and responsibility.

The firm pays me the munificient salary of $30 a week. Five dollars a day. About what a bricklayer gets. And for this five dollars it is necessary for me to work six days each week in addition to about four nights. I have never heard a wail from a camera man that has been printed, but I believe its about time something was done. Let us hear from more camera men with a view of forming some kind of an organization that will convince the manufacturers that good work with a camera is worth more than $5 a day.

FOR THE LAWRENCE "KIDNAPPING" EXCITEMENT.

While people in all sections of the land are talking pro and con on the removal (or "kidnapping") of the Lawrence strike children, Edwin Thanhouser sends The World notification of the filming of "The Cry of the Children," suggested by Elizabeth Barrett Browning's great child labor poem. The production is in the "feature" class, being two reels. Mr. Thanhouser feels that it will be a benefit to humanity just as was the poem; in fact, a larger one, since it will reach the thousands on thousands who do not read poetry. As a standard story on the child-labor question, the film should have a long life before it. Release is on Tuesday, April 30th.

Gentlemen:—

Replying to your letter of March 1st, regarding our experience with the 15 H. P. Special Electric Type Engine installed four months ago, will say it has proven entirely satisfactory.

This Plant operates to within five per cent. of rated capacity for twelve to thirteen hours a day seven days a week. The regulation for load variation is excellent and has to take care of a variation from constant load (momentarily) of 96 amp. Generator is rated at 80 amperes.

The cost for operation under these conditions is about twenty per cent. of that charged for Central Station service. The light is absolutely steady and produces a wonderful result in pictures projected—over that secured through the use of alternating Central Station service.

This plant has been in operation since Dec. 20, 1911, and has given us no trouble whatever. We consider the 15 H. P. Engine with 10 K. W. Western Electric Generator the ideal outfit for the average picture theatre. Ample capacity and none going to waste.

Yours very truly,

ESSANAY.

ALKALI BESTS BRONCHO BILLY (Mar. 26).—Ben Hardy, owner of the "Three 4 Ranch," receives a letter from his sister in the East, saying she is sending her little girl to visit him. Hardy is delighted and sends "Alkali" Ike to the depot to meet "the little girl" with a small burro and a doll to quiet her if she cries. "Alkali" finds her a full grown young lady, however, and is astonished when she grabs his broncho, vaults into the saddle and galops off, leaving him to struggle back on the stubborn burro. All the boys, including Broncho Billy, now fall in love with the charming miss. Broncho and "Alkali" are the bitterest rivals. A barn dance is to be held and all the boys want to take the girl. She masters the situation by having a horse-race, agreeing to go with the fellow that catches and takes her out of the saddle. After a thrilling race, Broncho wins, and is proud over his conquest, when 'Alkali" wanders up and explodes a bomb by announcing if he doesn't get the girl he will not furnish the music for the dance. Broncho is forced to give in and watches in supreme disgust as the laughing boys all hike off with their respective girls, leaving him sadly alone and forlorn.

AT THE END OF THE TRAIL (Mar. 28).—Pierre Bonvard, a French-Canadian adventurer, deserts his companion, Tukish, a half-breed Indian, and leaves him to die in the snow. Tukish is rescued by Waldron, an old trapper, who gives him a home in his cabin. Bonvard, who is wanted by the Northwest Mounted Police for murder, comes to Waldron's cabin while Tukish is away, accepts his hospitality, then steals a hoard of gold, stabs the old trapper and makes his escape on his dog-sled. Tukish returns, discovers the situation, learns Bonvard has done the deed, rushes out to Waldron's dog-sled and sets off in pursuit of Bonvard. A thrilling chase ensues over miles of frozen ice and snow, until at last Tukish overtakes the scoundrel and a hand-to-hand fight with knives begins. Sergeant Brett, of the Mounted Police, comes upon the trail of the men and reaches the end of the trail some time later, to find Tukish gasping out his life across the dead body of Bonvard. Tukish has strength enough to give Brett the sfolen gold, beg him to return it to Waldron, then dies in his arms. With a heavy heart, Brett starts back across the frozen wastes with the two dead bodies.

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED (Mar. 29).—William McGrath, a wealthy New York clubman, divorces his wife out in Reno. Some months later McGrath is a guest at the home of Judge Rathbone on the Hudson, for a week-end house party. McGrath arrives, and is dumbfounded when Mrs. Rathbone greets him with the startling news that his former wife is among the invited guests. McGrath manages to avoid a meeting for a short time, but finally some young schemers entice him and his former wife into the gun-room and leave them. McGrath makes pease overtures, but the former Mrs. McGrath haughtily sweeps out with a frigid glare. In exa'mining a shot-gun, McGrath accidentally discharges it and is knocked unconscious on the floor. The guests rush in and find him, and his former wife, thinking him dead, swoons. McGrath revives, sees her in the chair and thinks he has killed her. He now gets the guests out of the room, then, when she revives, they make up their old quarrel and agree to re-marry. The judge is consulted and surprises them with the news that while they were divorced in Reno, the laws are different in New York and they are still man and wife. Instantly Mrs. McGrath assumes her old authority and tries to get McGrath to pay some enormous bill. He refuses, rushes into the library where the judge is seated, gasps out his troubles and is delighted when the judge informs him he is only joking and McGrath is really divorced. With a look of disdain toward his former spouse, McGrath now sweeps out with a beautiful young lady guest, leaving Mrs. McGrath "who was" to rage in futile anger.

AN ARIZONA ESCAPADE (Mar. 30).—Brig Harris, a renegade Mexican, casts off his sweetheart, telling her he is tired of her. Harris and a pal now find that a shipment of ore from the Catspaw mine is to be left overnight at the house of Barnes, the town agent. A plot to rob Barnes is instantly laid. Barnes is also a doctor, and Harris lures him to his shack by shamming sickness. In the shack Barnes is overpowered and left tied in the bunk. The two ruffians now ride to Barnes' house and force an entrance. Mrs. Barnes hears them, secures the sack of ore and barricades herself in a number of different rooms, forcing the robbers to break through each successive door with an axe. Harris' sweetheart happens to go to his shack for revenge upon him and finds Barnes. She releases him and urges him to secure a posse and capture the scoundrels before they can secure the ore. Barnes does so and they reach the house just as Harris and his pal are breaking through the last door of a clothes closet in which brave Mrs. Barnes has hidden. The ruffians are hauled off to jail and Barnes takes his wife in his arms with a prayer of joy that she has saved the ore.

KALEM.

THE TRAIL THROUGH THE HILLS (Mar. 25).—The Indians swept down upon the Regan cabin and set it ablaze. During the powwow, Kitty Regan escaped and encountered a party of pioneers. The pioneers were headed by Harry Livingston and his sweetheart, Mary Lane. Breathlessly Kitty described the attack and begged for help. The men lost no time in going to the rescue and Harry, finding his horse fatigued from the taxing journey, took Mary's pinto pony and followed the relief party, guided by Kitty.

The crafty savages had carefully watched the advancing party and a fierce battle was soon waging. Several of the Indians encircled the white men and captured a number of horses, among them, the pony. Harry soon found himself engaged in a hand-to-hand encounter with an Indian, who finally thrust the young man over a cliff, and, with a yell of satisfaction, ran to join his companions.

By careful maneuvers and fine marksmanship, the pioneers completely annihilated the band of red men and returned to the wagons, only to find that Harry was missing. Meanwhile the young man had regained consciousness and found his leg broken. He clung to the rocks and called for help. High above the abandoned pony was calmly grazing, awaiting its rider. The loosened lariet, fastened to the saddle, hung over the cliff and in a moment caught the eyes of Harry.

The horse came to the summit of the cliff and permitted the rope to dangle within reach of Harry, who drew himself to the solid ground. Harry's reunion with his sweetheart and the reception given the pony make a striking finale.

THE KIDNAPPED CONDUCTOR (Mar. 27).—The morning after the dance Ruth and May awaken late, and make a run for the car to get to work. As they arrive at the corner their car is just going by. Notwithstanding their frantic signals the conductor refuses to wait for them, and the girls are forced to walk to town, where they have a hurried breakfast at the lunch counter.

Reporting for work their employer calls their attention to the late hour of their arrival, and immediately discharges them. Blaming the street car conductor for their predicament, the girls plot revenge. The many comedy situations that follow make this a roaring farce.

OUTWITTING FATHER (Mar. 27).—Mr. Armstrong is not impressed with his daughter Jennie's sweetheart, Dick, and orders that young man to keep away from his house.

Passing Mr. Armstrong's barber shop the following day, Dick sees a sign hanging on the door reading: "Barber wanted." This gives Dick an idea. Securing a complete disguise he applies for the job, and is set to work. The ingenious scheme followed by the lovers in exchanging notes, and the situation where the eventual exposure takes place are well worked out.

THE BANKER'S DAUGHTER (Mar. 29).—Kent, the bank teller, is in love with Bess, the president's daughter, but the young couple keep their affection a secret from the father until such time as Kent gains an expected promotion.

Dixon, the cashier, finds himself in financial difficulties because of ill-advised speculations. He thinks if he can win Bess' hand he will be able to recoup and he therefore asks the banker's permission to pay court to the young lady. The president favors the match and is therefore annoyed when he oversees the relations between Kent and Bess.

Dixon is called on for margins and becomes desperate. He takes the bank's funds during the night and hastens to the depot, only to find the last train pulling out. An automobile, whose owner has stepped across the street, meets the eyes of the cashier, and he jumps in and drives away rapidly. The owner, returning, sees the fleeing defaulter and summons a policeman, who enters another machine and follows in pursuit.

Coming to a lake, Dixon jumps on an iceboat and speeds away, but the officer is close at his heels, secures a speedy ice-yacht, and follows.

In the morning, news of the defalcation starts a run on the bank. The president is almost distracted, but Kent and Bess come to his rescue with a clever ruse. At a friendly stationery store they fill money bags with envelopes and poker chips and return to the bank, where the anxious depositors are calmed by the sight of apparent relief.

Dixon is captured after a desperate struggle with the officer and brought to the bank. He is immediately placed in custody, the stolen money is returned and when Kent, who is now promoted to the position of cashier, makes his proposition the banker concludes that he will make a good son-in-

LUBIN.

HOODOOED (Mar. 25).—Brown strikes a bargain and purchases a mirror for ten cents. While showing it to Mrs. Brown, he breaks it. A negro servant shows him a dream book, in which it says, "to break a mirror, means seven years' bad luck." Brown does not believe in such rot. But the plaster begins to fall from the ceiling, hitting Brown on the head. He calls for the dream book to see how the spell can be broken. He learns from the book that he must obtain another mirror exactly like the one broken, and get some one knowingly to break it. He starts out but numerous accidents befall him. Finally he hires a rig, which is wrecked, and he is compelled to pay for it. At last he arrives at the store only to find that the last mirror has been sold to a man a few seconds before he arrived. He runs after the man and induces him to sell him the mirror. He encounters many difficulties in trying to get someone to break the mirror. He finally succeeds in getting a Chinaman to break it. This causes the shelves with all the laundry bundles ti tumble down. Brown is tickled to death as the hoodoo has been passed to the Chinaman.

HER UNCLE JOHN (Mar. 25).—Miss Grace is leaving the house one morning, when she drops her handbag. It is picked up and handed to her by a young man who tries to form an acquaintance. At this moment, Grace's sweetheart, Jack Coleman, comes to accompany her to work. When they start to walk the young man follows, hoping that the sweetheart will leave. At last Grace and her sweetheart part. The fellow accosts her and he is called down. The next morning the young man is on the job. The postman appears to deliver mail. Grace issues from the house and is handed a letter. She learns that her uncle John, whom she has never seen, will pay her a visit. Her sweetheart again comes out and is informed of the glad news. While the two are talking Grace drops the letter. She and her sweetheart leave and the young man picks up the letter and reads it. He impersonates Uncle John and calls at the boarding house to see the girl. He is very pleasantly received by Grace. While they are talking her sweetheart enters the room. He tells uncle of his love for Grace and shows him the engagement ring on her finger. The supposed uncle refuses him instantly and orders him from the room. Her sweetheart leaves and the persistent lover improves his opportunity. While he is making great headway a letter from the real uncle arrives. The girl sees the swindle, pulls off the swindler's disguise and with the assistance of the landlady they throw him out. The commotion attracts the attention of the sweetheart who has lingered on the front steps. He also pitches into the culprit and they proceed to beat him up. Just at this moment the real uncle arrives and he takes a hand. Relieving the victim of his revolver he draws his own gun and orders him out.

RICE AND OLD SHOES (Mar. 27).—Roy Dean and his wife had been married about five years when Roy began to neglect his home for the club. Becoming desperate at her husband's neglect, Mrs. Dean threatened to sue for divorce. Proceedings are under way when a letter from Mrs. Dean's sister reminds her that she has promised to attend her sister's wedding. Mrs. Dean shows the letter to her husband and for the sake of appearances they agree to attend the wedding together. One of the little flower girls mischievously fills the brim of Mrs. Dean's hat with rice and also spills some of it down the inside of her coat without the knowledge of Mrs. Dean. On the way home in the train Mrs. Dean removes her coat, out spills the rice. Arriving home, Mrs. Dean takes off her hat and another shower of rice falls from it. After all have gone to bed except Dean he sits looking at the little mound of rice that fell from his wife's hat. It brings to his memory scenes connected with his wedding. He steals to her room and asks forgiveness for his neglect and promises to begin all over again.

VITAGRAPH.

THE BLACK WALL (Mar. 18.).—The story of the "Black Wall" takes us among miners, as we follow the daughter of one of them on her way with his father's lunch, escorted by a little son of another miner. They enter a great tunnel, and have almost reached their father when an explosion occurs. The black wall is thrown down like a curtain, separating the workers and the two children from all possible means of exit. Expert miners dig until they reach the wall, through which they force an air-tube to give the imprisoned miners air and through which they force water. The little boy first crawls through it and then returns for the little girl, after which the miners are brought through.

THE OLD SILVER WATCH (Mar. 19.).—Mrs. Scranton, a poor widow, dies, leaving two children, Frank and Mildred. She gives the son her heirloom, an old silver watch. Having no immediate relatives, her children are adopted by two families of means. Years afterward Frank and Mildred meet. Mildred is attacked by a thief who tries to steal her pocketbook. Frank comes to her assistance and has the foot-pad arrested. Not knowing each other, he and Mildred fall in love and become engaged to be married. The wedding is about to be performed by the clergyman when the thief sneaks into the house, and seeing Frank, shoots at him. The ball strikes the old silver watch in Frank's vest pocket. Frank takes the time-piece from his pocket and it is recognized by his sister. From it they learn their relationship and the love of brother and sister is renewed.

THE TWO PENITENTS (Mar. 20.).—Arthur Packard dies suddenly, leaving his business to his son George. James Parton, confidential and faithful clerk to Mr. Packard, endeavors to assist the young man in the management of affairs, but is discharged for his presumption. The clerk impulsively confiscates some of his employer's funds and decamps West with his little daughter, Ruth. Packard fails in business and is ruined. He goes West and becomes dissolute. James Parton strikes gold, and decides to make restitution to Packard. He sends his daughter with the gold and a note of explanation to Packard. On her way the stage coach is held up by Packard and his gang. They take Miss Parton to their cabin and one of them attempts to embrace her. A latent spark of manhood in Packard asserts itself. At the point of a revolver he locks his two companions in another room. He allows Ruth to go and she returns to her father. Packard has found Parton's note in the satchel and hastens to his home. The two men confess their sins in the presence of Ruth. Packard asks Parton for his daughter. He gives his consent and life opens up with a new and brighter future.

MR. BOLTER'S INFATUATION (Mar. 22).—Mr. Ben Bolter, strolling down the street, sees the bill poster putting up bills of a burlesque show. He persuades his friend, Mr. Merker, to go with him to the show. While purchasing their tickets, they see Nina Celeste, the leading lady, and she makes an impression on the susceptible Bolter. He sends her a note, asking her to come out and have cakes and coffee. She is highly amused and tells him to come to New York City and call on her at the Hotel des Imbeciles. Bolter takes it in good faith and feels like a regular "cut-up." He goes to New York and wanders around the streets, asking for the Hotel des Imbeciles, gets himself mistaken for a lunatic, has his pockets picked and finally lands in a police station, where he telegraphs to Merker to come and get him out of his scrape. Merker does so, but gives him a solemn warning never to make such a fool of himself again.

HER FORGOTTEN DANCING SHOES (Mar. 23).—The night of the grand reception and dance finds Belle Oakley in high glee as she leaves for the reception. She arrives at the reception and discovers that she is without her dancing shoes. She announces her loss and immediately all the young men volunteer to go in search of them. Harry Brown, who was not as quick as the others, is left behind and sits dejectedly on the curb while the others drive away. They enter Belle's home and ransack everything. Finally they come to a closet where they discover an assortment of footwear. Each of them seizes a pair. In the meantime, Harry Brown discovers Belle's bag, which she had dropped, containing her dancing shoes; he rushes back into the house, receives Belle's ardent thanks and secures her as a partner for the rest of the evening. When the others come back with the motley assortment of shoes, Belle and Brown laught at them, and he, placing his arm around Belle's waist, they glide into the mazes of the waltz.

TAFT AND HIS CABINET (Mar. 23).—Showing President Taft and his Cabinet in session in the Cabinet Chamber of the White House, giving us a personal introduction to the heads of the American Nation, including Vice-President Sherman. It not only makes us personally acquainted with the places of importance in Washington, but gives entree to the Executive Chambers, where it is considered a privilege to enter.

THE PRICE OF BIG BOB'S SILENCE (Mar. 25).—William Duncan, his mother's only child, leaves his home town as a youth. Away from home, he goes to the bad. Having a deep love and regard for his mother, he keeps her in ignorance of his career as "Long Bill," the highwayman. "Big Bob," the sheriff of the county, with a posse, goes in pursuit of "Long Bill," who keeps his pursuers well covered and at a favorable opening he rids himself of one of them with an unerring shot and gets away.

"Long Bill's" mother is advised by her physician to go away for a while. She determines to visit her son. On her way, the stage coach is held up by "Long Bill," who recognizes his mother and learns later that she has arrived at her destination. He decides to give himself up, beg the sheriff's silence, and suffer the consequences of his crimes, rather than have his old mother find out his real character. He acts on this decision and "Big Bob," after landing him in ail, goes to the old lady and tells her that Bill is dead. The old lady decides to go back to her old home. The sheriff, with a number of the people of the town, escort her to the roadside to hail the passing stage and send her on her way with a hearty farewell and Godspeed.

HIS MOTHER'S SHROUD (Mar. 26).—A poor old widowed mother is deserted by her son. She feels the breath of death whispering to her his last call. Her son, who has joined the army, is arrested for stealing from his companions and kills the guard in escaping from imprisonment. He is pursued and flees to his mother's house. He demands money from her. She cannot grant his request and he searches the hut until he finds her treasured winding sheet. He leaves to pawn it. At the pawn shop he discovers the note which his mother has pinned on it, requesting that it be used in the burial of her body. He is conscience-stricken and rushes back to return it to his mother. In the meantime, the soldiers have learned of his whereabouts and have broken into his mother's home. She hides behind an old curtain, and the soldiers, supposing it is the son, raise their rifles. The son rushes in between his mother and the discharging guns. Both are killed.

THE GOVERNOR WHO HAD A HEART (Mar. 27).—William Browden is elected governor of his state, with the understanding that he will pass the bill in favor of child labor. His political supporters have pledged themselves to support this measure. The governor is a conscientious man, and with his wife, visits many of the factories and sweatshops where children are employed. While visiting one of these places, a little girl faints with fatigue in her efforts to meet the requirements of her heartless employer. The executive clasps the child in his arms and carries her to his home, where he and his wife do all they can to revive her and assist her poor, widowed mother.

The bill is introduced in the legislature. It passes both houses, but before the governor refuses to sign it, he invites all the leading politicians to a banquet at his home. When his turn to speak comes, he takes the subject of child labor and so eloquently presents it, that his hearers are suppressed with thought. During the lull, he introduces the little girl who fainted in the sweatshop. He so presents the case that all his political associates are ashamed of themselves and so deeply moved, they endorse his veto of the bill and promise to sustain his campaign against the evils of the system.

THE HAUNTED ROCKER (Mar. 29).—After a night at the club, old Boggs returns home, filled with good cheer and spirit. His daughter Madge, is in love with Jack Farnum, to whom her father very much objects as a son-in-law. Hearing her father coming, Madge tells Jack to hide. Jack hastily jumps up from the old rocking chair which Boggs usually occupies. Boggs sees it rocking back and forth and thinks he is "seeing things" and not in his right senses. His discomfiture gives Jack and Madge an idea.

They attach a string to the rocker and pass it through the window, out into the garden, where, by pulling the string, they cause the chair to move back and forth whenever the old gentleman enters the room. Seeing no reason for his favorite sitting place acting in such a queer manner, he comes to the conclusion that he is surely going out of his head.

He requests an interview with Jack and Madge, consenting to their marriage, with the agreement that after they are married they will come to live with him and care for him the rest of his life. The bargain is made and after they are married Jack and Madge tell Papa Boggs all about their little joke on him.

THE SUIT OF ARMOR (Mar. 29).—John Bunyon refuses to allow Harry Lansdale to pay attention to his daughter Blanche. The young man wagers $10,000 with Bunyon that he will marry his daughter in spite of his objections. Bunyon takes his bet. A suit of armor standing in the hall of Bunyon's home is very much in need of repair. An armorer is brought in and carries it off to his shop. An idea comes to young Lansdale to bribe the armorer to let him get inside of it when it is returned to Bunyon's home and in this way secure an interview with Blanche. The armor is returned the next night with Lansdale inside of it. Blanche's Great Dane, "Panther," sees the suit move, and attacks it. Blanche, who is locked in her room under the care of her crabbed old maid, hears the confusion and the two women run down into the hall. Blanche recognizes Harry's voice, pulls the dog away and locks it in another room. Harry tells Blanche how he got into the house and proposes that they elope at once. She hastily agrees, and he, with the suit of armor on, and she, without coat or hat, jump into a passing automobile and drive to a clergyman without delay.

Old Bunyon discovers the absence of the cherished antique. When he is told that it has eloped with his daughter he goes in pursuit. But too late. Lansdale marries his daughter, wins the $10,000 from his father-in-law, which he pays like the good sport he is, he not only giving Harry a check, but his blessing, showing that he appreciates a coup, even if it is at his expense.

NEMESIS (Mar. 30).—By subtle inducements and defamation of young Dick Adams, Bob Carter, a well seasoned and wealthy profligate, succeeds in persuading Nell Chandler to marry him and break her engagement with Dick. Bob tires of her after a bit. In the meantime, Dick has taken up the practice of medicine and becomes a celebrated specialist in heart troubles. He meets the wrteched Nell. He leads her to his house, not knowing who she is, makes a hasty diagnosis of her condition and recognizes her. It is too late, however, to save her life and she dies of a broken heart.

Dick is more bitter against Carter than ever and the day of reckoning comes in a very peculiar manner. Carter is stricken with heart trouble and Dr. Richard Adams is recommended as a specialist of the heart. Carter calls upon him. Dick knows him at once, and gives him an examination. He tells him that he will give him a still more thorough test. He takes him into another room, seats him in a chair, at a table on which is a photograph of Nell Chandler and Dick leaves the room for a few minutes. Carter sees Nell's picture, his conscience asserts itself and he becomes greatly agitated, is seized with an attack of heart failure and drops to the floor, dead. Dick hears the fall and re-enters the room, gazes meditatively upon the dead man and repeats to himself: "The wages if sin is death"!

THE LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER'S DAUGHTER (March 26.)—The old keeper of the lighthouse and his daughter have lived together peacefully year after year tending the lights on St. David's Island. The old man has come to believe that his daughter's after life will be spent near to him when she marries John West. Little they dream that the ways of a woman's love must follow the dictates of her heart and when she steals away from the lighthouse and marries another man sadness falls upon those two who are left behind. Six months later Jeannette bids her husband good-bye as he goes on a fishing voyage. The great ship never comes back, her heart grows weary of waiting and she returns to her old home. The dawn of a new hope is just about to break into bloom in the heart of John West when the lost husband is rescued from a lonely island and is brought back to his wife.

PERCIVAL CHUBBS AND THE WIDOW (March 27.)—Percival Chubbs, a widower, in love with the widow Oldfield. He pops the question one night and is accepted. Not long after he discovers that the widow is bald and wears a wig. Chubbs now sets about to rid himself of his false affinity, and accordingly writes her declaring the prospective marriage impossible. This makes the widow furious and indignant. Her son takes sides with his mother and proceeds to Chubb's house where he overawes and threatens Chubbs to a standstill. Fearing bodily harm Chubbs retracts his statement and promises to make good his former offer of marriage.

Chubbs also has a son, a former athlete, who comes to his father's rescue by devising a plan to break the engagement. The day following the widow receives a letter from Chubbs stating that he cannot live without her and if agreeable he will call on her and introduce his son. That evening Chubbs and his son arrive at the widow's house. Chubbs pretends he loves the widow as deeply as ever, while the young men retire to an adjoining room where they indulge in a friendly bout with boxing gloves. The widow's son now finds to his surprise he has at last met his superior, and receives a sound thrashing at the hands of young Chubbs. The disturbance brings the widow upon the scene, where she finds her dearly beloved son's face pummelled to a frazzle. This arouses her anger to such an extent she forthwith breaks the engagement. Chubbs and his son, chuckling over their success, are dismissed from the house.

HOW WASHINGTON CROSSED THE DELAWARE (March 29).—Bess, the daughter of a Tory squire, is herself in sympathy with the Continentals. Her sweetheart, Jack, is a young officer serving in George Washington's army now on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware. Her father's home is near Trenton. Jack gets a note from her to the effect that the next night her father is to be entertained by the Hessian officer, and that these foreigners are not watching their defencers very carefully. Jack shows the note to Washington and volunteers to cross the river to reconnoiter. He does so and goes to the squire's home. Here Bess is alone except for one officer who evidently found the charming little rebel more attractive than the Christmas night feast. She hears an owl hoot and recognizes Jack's signal. Fearing a conflict between the two men she leaves the officer in one room while she goes to meet Jack and, as she hopes to send him on his way without any knowledge of the other man. But Fate wills otherwise. There is a desperate sword fight between them in which Jack is victorious and, leaving his opponent stunned, he hastens to the river bank where he gives Washington the signal to cross with the American army. This he does, finding the Hessians unprepared and, after a short conflict, obtaining the surrender of their whole force, including their leader, Colonel Rahl. Bess pleads for the freedom of her father and Washington graciously accedes. It is quite evident that the old squire will no longer object to the union of his daughter and the gallant young Continental officer.

A FUNERAL THAT FLASHED IN THE PAN (March 30.)—There are seven students in Siwash College whose bad conduct has caused them to be barred from all amusement by the college faculty. There is to be a football game between Siwash and Hambletonian College which they want to attend. An item in a newspaper telling how another college took a vacation because of a funeral, suggests to them a brilliant idea. A young chap by the name of Hogboom is persuaded to disappear and get a telegraphic friend of his in his home town to wire news of his untimely death, with the idea that the funeral may be held in the morning and the boys will then be free to attend the game in the afternoon. The plan succeeds admirably and the boys take the telegram to the principal of the college, who wires for a verification of the sad news. Hogboom, at the other end, receives the professor's telegram and answers it. All college exercises are suspended for that day. Not content with this Hogboom decides to go back to the college and watch the proceedings, even attending his own memorial services. The boys are horrified but helpless and when the great day comes he coerces them into secreting him in the organ-loft,

Kraus Manufacturing Co., 14 East 17th Street New York where he can hear the eulogies to be pronounced on his past career. But he has forgotten that the one special girl in whom he is particularly interested will be grieved by his death and when she appears, a situation that he hadn't bargained for developes. From his hiding place he sees her tears and would gladly call the whole affair off. To make matters worse, his rival takes a seat beside the girl. This is almost as much as he can stand and when the latter proceeds to comfort her, taking her hand upon his shoulder and wiping her tears away it is too much for him, and seizing the chair upon which he is sitting, he bursts through the side of the organ loft and appears upon the platform before the astonished multitude. From there he descends, climbing over the backs of the seats until he reaches her and proceeds to do the comforting himself.

CINES.

A CHRISTIAN SLAVE (March 30.)—Miriam, a lovely Greek girl, is a slave in the household of Bu-Hamid, an Arab Chieftain.

Unfortunately, his guest, a young journalist named Norton, pays marked attentions toward the slave, which arouses jealousy in the heart of the Chief.

To conform with the laws of hospitality, Bu-Hamid plans to wait until his guest has taken leave, and then to follow with his horsemen to kill him.

Miriam learns of the wicked design, however, and warns Norton, who is about to make his departure.

The Arabs follow in great haste, but Norton, already prepared, rides his best, and after a perilous journey encounters a regiment of soldiers.

When the situation is explained to them, the soldiers eagerly pursue the Arabs, defeat them, and allow Norton to rescue the beautiful Miriam.

REUNITED (March 26.)—Harry, a reckless young artist, elopes with Mary, the daughter of a wealthy old aristocrat. The proud father is quite averse to the match, and refuses to allow them to return home. As it happens, the young artist does not prove able to provide a living, and they are soon reduced to poverty; their only consolation being the birth of a child.

Driven to desperation, the mother takes the child to her father's home, and places him in the favorite chair, with a letter of appeal.

Later, when the old man sees the child and the letter, he is greatly moved, and insists that the family be joyfully reunited.

PISA, ITALY (March 26.)—An entertaining travelogue subject, showing the castle of the Medicis, and the Arno River—many artistic monuments—the Cathedral, and the famous Leaning Tower.

MELIES.

A MAN WORTH WHILE (April 4.)—Anne Worth inherits the entire large fortune of her uncle, and decides to take a trip West. At a Western hotel the heiress becomes bored by re-short life, and becomes heartily sick of fortune seekers who have learned of her large bank roll and would marry it. But, not averse to marriage she devises a novel plan to find a man worth while.

Advertising for a position as governess she obtains employment in the Fletcher home on a ranch. One of her daily duties is to accompany Doris Fletcher horseback riding, and on many occasions they have taken particular notice of John Scott, a woodman, whose gallantry appealed to them. After exchanging the usual pleasantries with him one morning the girls ride on, only to be attacked by highwaymen. Doris is overcome while Ann shouts for help. John comes and the highwaymen flee. He carries Doris into his humble cottage and administers what aid he can. Meanwhile some of the cowboys have heard the cry and question Anne. She tells of the attack, and they hasten in the direction the bandits took.

John knowing well what they meant to do, hastens after them and arrives in time to prevent the mob from taking the law into its own hands by lynching the culprits. He holds the mob at bay with his revolver until the arrival of the sheriff and his men. Ann hears and knows that here at last is a man worth while.

A month later John has learned to love and propose to Anne. After the marriage he takes her to his little cabin expecting to enjoy the rest of his days there, but Anne tells of her great wealth and of her search for a man worth while, that led her to deceive in order to win—to "stoop to conquer."

BIOGRAPH.

THE GODDESS OF SAGEBRUSH GULCH (March 25.)—The Goddess, the prettiest and best natured girl that ever graced that little mining town, meets the tenderfoot prospector and leaves him another worshipper of her. His chances, however, are slim for Blue-grass Pete has won her affections, he having at an opportune moment saved her from the fangs of a snake which was about to attack her. Pete, however, is weak and is fascinated by the Goddess' sister, who visits her. He later gives the sister his savings to keep. The Goddess, heartbroken over the loss of her sweetheart, is now sure they will be married and determines to leave. Pete's pal, knowing of the girl having the savings, plans to steal them. The Goddess overhears the plot, but her sorrow having left her in a vengeful spirit, she makes no effort to secure aid. Later her better nature asserts itself, and securing aid, she and the miners arrive in time to save her sister from a horrible death, for Pete's pal had been recognized by the girl and had tied her to a post in the cabin. He and his companions had then made a hasty departure, forgetting a lighted cigarette which had fired the cabin, leaving the girl helpless amidst the raging flames.

THE GIRL AND HER TRUST (March 28.)—Grace, the operator at Hillville, is apprised of the fact that train No. 7 will bring to her office $2,000, consigned to the Simpson Construction Company. Jack, the station agent, offers to let her have his pistol, while he is away to lunch, but she scorns this, exclaiming "Danger? Why nothing ever happens in this slow place." However, when the train arrives and the money is placed in the strong box, he again prevails upon her to take the pistol, but without success. Two tramps, who have come in on the bumpers, see the bag placed in the box, and regard this their great opportunity. Waiting until Jack has gone, they break in and make for the box. It is locked and they must have the key, so they try to get to the girl, who has locked herself in her office. This failing, they load the box on a hand-car to take it away to blow it open. The girl, meanwhile, has telegraphed for aid, and realizing the tramps' design, rushes out and throws herself in front of the hand-car. The tramps drag her aboard and are off. They are soon pursued by an engine from the next station ahead, and here occurs, without exception, the most thrilling pursuit ever depicted.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 12, 1912 (Mar. 18).—Shreveport, La. A cyclone plays havoc with a section of this town.

Waycross, Ga. The heavy rains swell the little stream running through the Wire-Grass City, making life miserable for those living on its banks.

Davos, Switzerland. Coasting down the Alps proves one of the winter season's most enjoyable pastimes.

Norfolk, Va. The Old Dominion Line steamship Madison, after being rammed by a Norwegian freighter in a gale, sinks between Bush Bluff Light and Lambert's Point. All on board rescued.

Hua-Muong, Indo-China. The inhabitants of this town find a new sport in tobogganing down a waterway on banana tree leaves into the pool below.

Jamaica, N. Y. Louis Disbrow tests his new 300 horse power F. I. A. T. car, in which he expects to travel at the rate of 3 miles a minute on the beaches of California.

Stuttgart, Ark. A terrific hurricane leaves a trail of chaos on its trip across this state.

Griefswald, Germany. The local playhouse is completely destroyed by fire.

Milstead, Ala. The New York to New Orleans Limited is derailed and wrecked. One killed and six injured.

A VICTIM OF FIREWATER (Mar. 27).—This is the story of an Indian who goes away to school and finally to college and returns with a small education and a great thirst. This he satisfies with whiskey, with the result that he soon becomes a degenerate—steals and becomes a fugitive from justice. The story ends satisfactorily for everybody.

MEXICAN ELOPEMENT (Mar. 28).—This story is particularly good on account of its beautiful love scenes and magnificent scenic effects. The story is simply one of a young girl in love with a man for whom her father has no use. Finally they make a romantic escape and are married just in time.

JIMMY'S MISFORTUNE (Mar. 30).—Jimmy is a newsboy with a crippled sister, who is saving up his pennies to buy her a rolling chair for Christmas, when he meets with an accident which lands him in the hospital. All his plans are not ruined, however, as a wealthy man becomes interested in him and finally both Jimmy and his sister are made wonderfully happy.

C. G. P. C.

RADGRUNE (Mar. 25).—This remarkable story deals with the love of a woman for a man whom she has caused to be condemned to death, and whom she ultimately saves at the sacrifice of her own life. The story is taken from the Middle Ages and the settings are in beautiful castles in the Old World.

THAT TERRIBLE AFRICAN HUNTER (Mar. 29).—No need to say who is caricatured in this screamingly funny picture of great African hunters. It is sufficient to say that the title alone will bring crowds and the picture will send them away thoroughly satisfied.

WINTER ON THE BALTIC SEA (Mar. 29).—A very interesting view of the ice and snow which so greatly impedes the navigation on the Baltic. A film of photographic beauty.

ECLIPSE.

TRUE LOVE (Mar. 27).—Robert Martin and bea tiful Grace Carter are engaged to be married, b when Robert's parents hear that the young lady family fortune has been greatly reduced by a la suit, they become very much opposed to the matc The young fellow remains steadfast, but Gra bravely insists that they break the engagement.

Circumstances force Grace to accept a positic as companion to a Mrs. Stone, a friend of th Martins. As fate would have it, they attend house party given by Robert's parents.

Here the old love is rekindled, and Robert, aft successfully overcoming parental objections, insis upon an immediate wedding with the girl of h choice.

SELIG.

SONS OF THE NORTH WOODS (Mar. 25).—Babtiste, a woodsman, kisses his sweetheart Jan goodby, and starts north on a trading trip. A about the same time Hank Peters, a drunken trad from the North settlement, starts South with good supply of liquor. He carries with him a no to Janie MacKisson (whom he has never met), fro the proprietor of the Northern trading post. H indulges quite freely in the whiskey and its i fluence is marked when he meets Babtiste comin North. The drunken braggart tells Babtiste th he is going South to make love to Janie. Babtis tries to stop him but Hank starts on his way Sout Babtiste considers the proposition for a mome then turns his own dogs South again. In the mea time Janie's father discovers an Indian trapper i the nearby woods suffering from a broken leg. H brings the Indian to his shack and with Janie's a doctors the broken limb. Babtiste and Hank a now engaged in an exciting race over the sno trail to see who will reach the MacKisson cab first. Babtiste's dogs bolt after a rabbit and Han forges ahead. When he arrives at the cab Janie and Indian Jim are the only ones there. Han drunk with joy at his victory, as well as wit liquor, tries to embrace Janie. The Indian com to her aid, however, and at the point of a gu drives Hank out into the snow. Babtiste lat finds Hank almost frozen in the snow where he h fallen and returns good for evil by saving his lif

Condensers Will Not Break

By Using the

Wright Condenser Cells

The only appliance ever invented, the use of which, under all conditions, will absolutely prevent the breaking of condensers.

The value of this device is manifest. Its use will save unnecessary expense in replacing broken condensers; it will save the loss of light occasioned by cracked condensers of from five to thirty per cent; it will enable the exhibitor to project on his curtain perfect announcement and advertising slides which, with broken condensers, is impossible.

These cells are constructed for all makes of lamps for projecting machines and stereopticons and can be instantly applied.

The condensers can be cleaned without removing same from the cells.

The cells have been thoroughly tested in picture theaters and the condensers have in no instance broken, even under the most adverse conditions.

The price of the cells is $5.00 a set, charges prepaid. In ordering, remit by money order, bank draft or registered letter, and state specifically the make of lamp for which the cells are required.

Lord's prayer. The captain has come into the group of sailors as the little chap is praying, and kneeling beside him asks him who he is. He then recognizes a locket around his neck. It is his own boy. He takes him into his arms, and calling the grieving mother, the trinity rejoice at the mercy of Him above.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF CHECKERS (Mar. 29).—Smith & Smith, publishers, in a letter, notify Professor Bernard that they will accept his latest story if he will alter the enclosed paragraph—"Marry me and I will do away with my wife as I did her father." The absent-minded professor leaves this paragraph on his study table while he goes to the store to secure some cloth for his wife. The Professor, however, is very absent minded, and forgets his mission when he meets a group of firemen who induce him to play a game of checkers. In the meantime, Ellen, the cook, is having her troubles with the butcher boy, who brings liver instead of chops, as ordered. To settle the ensuing argument she brings the boy and the liver into the professor's study, and noticing the paragraph on the table, she drops the liver and with the boy starts at once for the police station to report what she supposes to be foul play. The professor returns, and picks up the meat, getting blood on his hands. A messenger comes for the dressmaker's model, and as he is aiding the boy to place the wrapped dummy in an auto he is arrested by a cock-sure detective, egged on by Ellen, the cook. At the station house the seeming tragedy is unravelled and the professor swears off on checkers for good.

BILLY'S SHOES (Mar. 27).—Billy decides that he needs a vacation, so he and his old-maid sister embark on a trip to the mountains. Before he goes, he buys some mountain shoes and has them well shod and well plugged with spikes. Without much forethought he wears these shoes wherever he goes and always leaves a long trail of mysterious looking marks.

Finally, when he decides to get rid of the shoes, he finds it an impossible task. They always manage to be returned to him at most inappropriate moments. The shoes get him into trouble with the police, the detective force, the hotel proprietor and the guests stopping at the same hotel he is stopping at.

HANDLE WITH CARE (March 29).—Father and mother on farm decide to send a box of goodies to their son Charlie, who is at college in a small town. They get everything together on a table and discover that they have no case to pack it in. Father drives to a nearby factory which happens to be a powder works, gets a case and takes it home, not noticing stenciling on case "Dynamite—Handle With Care." Case is packed and expressed. Pictures then show the careful horror with which the case is handled at the various transfer points. Case arrives at express office of college town. Express agent, frightened, does unusual things to insure safety. He 'phones to mayor-constable-justice of the peace, head of college, Charlie and the local fire brigade. All arrive and fearfully examine case. It is decided that case must be opened. Victim is balloted for, constable is chosen. Charlie having received letter from home, appreciates joke, further terrifies community and generally helps fun along. Excited suggestions and terror of assemblage. Night interrupts operations. Constable appointed night watchman. Constable goes to sleep. In the meantime, Charlie has let his pals in on the secret, describing and imitating the horror of bystanders. The boys rig up as highwaymen, hold up and bind constable, steal box. Constable terrified at their manner of handling box. Boys take box to Charlie's room and open box in pretended terror and gleefully prepare for the feed. Mayor taking his family out for a walk, brings them to station to show them box. Discover and free constable. All horrified at loss of box, rush to village hall and ring town bell and assemble citizens. Excited gathering of citizens about loss of box. All depart to inform Charlie. Wake up head of college. All go to Charlie's room and find the boys at the feed, with the incriminating box cover occupying prominent place on wall.

NESTOR.

A FEUDAL DEBT (Mar. 18).—Budd Harvey and Anse Tisdelle quarel. In the duel which follows, Harvey is killed. The tragedy is witnessed by Harvey's ten-year-old son. Tisdelle sends his son to a brother in the North. The Widow Harvey, in the meantime, rears her son and his sister to the feud.

Eighteen years have passed. The feudist has made several attempts upon the life of Tisdelle, but foiled always by the wily old mountaineer. The Tisdelle boy, who has become a practising physician in the North, decides to pay a visit to his parents in the old Kentucky home, it being the first since the feud was sworn. Whilst there hunting in the woods, he meets the Harvey girl. It is love at first sight. The brother discovers them and upbraids his sister for daring to meet the man whose father had slain their own father. The girl is horrified at the discovery and turns from the sworn enemy. The feudist draws to kill young Tisdelle, and there is a struggle in which young Harvey is disarmed. Tisdelle withdraws.

Later, Harvey embarks upon a hunting trip to the foods. During his absence, the mother is stricken and in danger of death. The daughter hastens for the doctor, but he, the only doctor in the village, is off in other parts. The distracted girl tells the postmaster of her mother's plight, and, in despair, returns to the bedside of the dying one. Young Tisdelle overhears her plea and takes the patient in hand.

Young Harvey returns, and, seeing the object of his hate beneath their very roof, raises his rifle to shoot; the girl, now awake to the almost hopeless struggle for her mother's life, intercepts, and, with the strength of despair, wrenches from her brother the rifle, and holds him at bay until the young doctor has brought back the mother to life. The fanatical feudist is melted and subjugated in spirit. They clasp hands; the debt is paid with "a life for a life," the mother's heart softens, and, in a spirit of grateful desire, she ends the feud and gives the young ones her maternal blessing.

A PAIR OF JACKS (Mar. 20).—Jack Lewis and his wife, Helen, live on a ranch. She goes away on a short visit and he accompanies her to the station. No sooner has he waved her "good-bye" than he meets Jack King. Jack Lewis invites him to come to the ranch.

Some days later Jack King receives a letter from his wife, Dora, telling him that she and the baby will surprise him soon with a visit. Jack King puts his wife and the baby's picture on the writing desk, leaves the letter on the table and hurries out.

Helen Lewis, a somewhat jealous woman, cuts short her visit and returns while both men are out. She finds both the picture and the letter, which, being addressed to "My dear Jack," makes her suppose that her husband has another wife and baby. Enraged, she rushes to her father's ranch, not far away. He snatches up his shotgun, and together they start for the Lewis ranch.

In the menawhile, Dora King has arrived with the baby. Jack Lewis returns home first and invites her inside. He takes the baby. The baby wants its bottle, and cries so that Jack Lewis is obliged to take it to its mother. As Dora is fixing the bottle and Jack Lewis is sitting on the bed with the baby, Helen Lewis and her father arrive and see the couple. Jack returns to the sitting-room with the now quieted baby. Helen and her genitor enter and proceed to demand an explanation. On seeing Jack dancing the baby, they completely lose their heads. Dora, believing them to be lunatics, snatches up her baby, runs back into the bedroom. Helen pounds upon the door, her father menaces Jack with the gun, and Dora hurries to the window and calls for help. Jack King, returning home, hears his wife's voice and rushes to her aid. Explanations are speedily made which soon make everything peaceful.

OVER A CRACKER BOWL (Mar. 23).—Jack Phillips and Betty Kellard plunge into the matrimonial sea. Dick Edmonds, Jack's closest pal, is the first to hear the news. In a letter, Jack invites him to call and make himself at home. Dick buys some presents for the newlyweds and starts on his journey to visit them.

A rift in the lute soon occurs, and all because Jack had been careless enough to break a cracker bowl. Betty is peeved and scolds Jack; the latter attempts to do likewise, and the better half quits the house in a huff. Solitude becomes oppressive and Jack, too, seeks the open air and the noise of the streets.

Dick arrives at the end of his journey, and, finding no one at home, concludes to take Jack at his word and makes himself at home. Placing the presents on the dressing table, he goes into the bathroom, takes a bath and then goes to bed.

Betty's risibilities cool off. She buys a cracker bowl and rushes home to make up with hubby. Dick's presents cause her some foolish heartaches, believing that Jack was buying things for another woman. Later she guesses Jack bought the presents for her only. She kisses the sleeping man, who, alas! is not her Jack! Horror-stricken, she runs into the parlor and straight into the outstretched arms of Jack, who has also brought home a cracker bowl as a peace offering. Then the tangle is straightened out and everybody is happy.

SANTA FE (Mar. 23).—We gaze with delight upon the "Capitol" dedicated 1900, replacing that destroyed by incendiaries in 1892; the governor's mansion, close by it; the "Palace of the Governors," built in 1605, which is the oldest executive building in North America. It has stood for 307 years and has witnessed the inaugural ceremonies of 101 governors. We also see San Miguel church. It was built in 1607 and renovated in recent years. The oldest house in America, built by Pueblo Indians long before Spanish occupation. The San Francisco Street and a trio of burros, the beasts of burden, close this picture.

IMP.

THE ROMANCE OF AN OLD MAID (Mar. 25).—Ruth Dayton, though she was smiled at by her friends, and regarded as having reached that stage of life when heart affairs had ceased to trouble her, was nevertheless not lost to possibilities. She was of a philanthropic turn of mind and in her work in the poorer districts at last found herself a victim of the tender passion.

She took an interest in a man who was left a widower, and who had one little daughter. He was a victim of alcohol but Ruth perceived in him the makings of a new man, and although he tore his child away and first resented her efforts to assist him, yet in the end, she succeeded in persuading him that self-respect was his privilege and not merely a chance possession of life. It was his right and his duty to respect himself.

And more than that the good-hearted woman was instrumental in obtaining for him a position of trust and responsibility, in which he made good. He was so earnest and so successful in his new life that he became a totally changed man with a bright outlook for the future. And his gratitude was his strong point. He was not slow to appreciate the kindliness of the hand which had helped him to do all this.

Indeed, he fell sincerely in love with Ruth and when he made the admission of his regard for her, he was very agreeably surprised that Ruth in her turn, had all along taken more than a merely philanthropic interest in his fortune. So this old maid's romance culminated in her marrying the former widower and becoming a second mother to his little daughter, of whom she was already very fond.

TEMPTED BUT TRUE (Mar. 28).—John is a village blacksmith. For him the attractions of great cities do not exist. He is happy in the probability of marrying Mary, a farmer's daughter, a pretty, simple-minded girl, apparently contented with her prospects, until she is lured by the hope of earning a living in a great city.

She makes for the city and secures a position behind a ribbon counter. She tastes boarding-house life. Home seems to have faded from her mind. Neither John nor her parents hear from her. Her admirer is her employer, but he does not find it an easy thing to succeed in her good graces by the usual café methods. So he schemes to entrap her by a bogus marriage.

Meanwhile, John at home, is getting so anxious for her that he decides to go to the city. He puts up at the very hotel where a plot is in progress to entrap Mary into the marriage. Then John makes his way to the boarding-house where Mary is staying, but she, poor girl, repulses homely John, and shows a preference for her city admirer. But John has made the discovery of the proposed bogus marriage. He finds that the marriage license is forged, and before the mischief can be consummated, he finds the minister and with him defeats the plot. So that the country girl is rescued from ruin and disgrace.

THE BABY (Mar. 30).—A young couple leave their infant in the care of a trained nurse whose duty it is to treat the "little darling" according to the latest methods of scientific hygiene. So we see the pretty nurse undressing the little one, accurately taking the temperature of the water in which the small body is to be bathed; handling the soap; the absorbent cotton and the other paraphernalia incidental to the function of dressing it.

The baby goes through the ordeal with a fair amount of infantile dignity. He cries a little, yet in the end, when he is fully dressed, he appears to have enjoyed the ordeal. When the happy parents of the child arrive, they appear to be exceedingly well pleased at the manner in which their baby has been tended.

SQUNK CITY FIRE COMPANY (Mar. 30).—Squnk City was without any adequate protection against fire, should a fire break out, and the worthy citizens of this progressive burg becoming suddenly alive to the fact, met in solemn conclave. And at that meeting they decided to form a fire brigade. Then the officers were appointed. For long, long days and nights there was no fire in Squnk City. Then one night the alarm bell rang and each of the officers arose from his bed, clothed himself in his uniform and made his way to the fire station.

There was a fire, not much of a one, it is true, but the Squnk City Fire Brigade, in its articles of organization, had omitted to define the respective duties of the officers. So that before the work of fire extinction could be begun, there was much dispute amongst these important functionaries as to whose duty it was to first start operations.

However in the end the fire was extinguished, not before, though, the inhabitants of a small household were placed in great danger from the tardiness with which these over-officious gentlemen got to work.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE CAPRICIOUSNESS OF LOVE (Mar. 16).—The parents of Annie and Peter wish them to wed, but they love Jim and Lizzie respectively. The parents bring about a meeting between their respective offsprings, and notwithstanding their natural antipathies to one another, love is awakened. Gradually the letters to their respective original flames cool down until at last Annie and Peter find they cannot live without each other.

A NARROW ESCAPE (Mar. 23).—Robert, whilst engaged in assisting his better half to wind wool, is endeavoring to conceal from her notice a message he has received from his bosom pals inviting him to the club when his wife is asleep. Smith and his wife are also staying at the house, Robert and Smith sharing one bedroom, whilst the two ladies occupy another. The household retires to rest, and the two men, having arranged their bolsters in semblance of two sleeping forms, steal forth on their midnight carousal, and are soon at the club imbibing not wisely but too well. On the way back home, their friends play a practical joke upon them. Whilst Robert and Smith are wrapped in the arms of Morpheus, they cause two tramps to change clothes with them, and then decamp. When morning comes, Robert and Smith awake, and a sorry spectacle they present. They hie them homewards, narrowly escaping detection by their wives on their way. The good ladies passing in close proximity to them, imagine the two forms resemble those of their hubbies, and are soon in pursuit. The two men are seen by the servant entering the house, and she, mistaking them for two tramps, invokes the aid of the law, but when the police and the women arrive, Roberts and Smith are found, comfortably seated, attired in morning coats, enjoying a cigarette.

THANHOUSER.

FOR SALE—A LIFE (Mar. 26).—A nervous, fault-finding invalid decides that his health requires that he shall live in the South, and manages to exchange his place "Up North," for a shack and an orange grove in Florida. Accompanied by his devoted wife he sails for his new home.

On the boat trip the couple meet a wealthy young clubman. This man is impressed with the wife's beauty, and for her sake puts up with the invalid. The husband plays cards with the clubman and a couple of his chums. He loses, but does not make any scene.

In Florida, the wife, who is an expert needlewoman, obtains fancy sewing to do, and while delivering some work to a hotel guest, again meets the clubman. He renews his acquaintance with the family, and the husband soon sees that the couple are in love, but does not object. He watches the situation with amusement, and when he believes the time is ripe, he approaches the clubman with a proposition, that for the sum of $10,000, he, the husband, will get a divorce and go away.

The clubman at first listened to the suggestion with horror. But at last he agreed to pay the money, believing that thereby he would add to the wife's happiness.

The wife came in while the deal was being discussed. She seized the shameful paper and tore it into bits, then ordered the clubman out of her house, refusing to listen to his offered explanation. When he died some time later, she was still ministering to him, and trying to make his last moments comfortable.

Many days after the funeral, the widow and the clubman met. At first she refused to talk to him, but gradually, as she thought of his many kindly ways she relented, and they parted "friends."

MY BABY'S VOICE (Mar. 29).—Rose Scott is a stenographer in the office of wealthy John Mackey and is wooed by the clerk there, one Merwin. But Mr. Mackey himself takes a fancy to her and she becomes Mrs. John Mackey. Ten years elapse and we find the Mackeys and their little daughter Ruth on a pleasure trip. Ruth makes friends with the hotel switchboard operator and to amuse herself uses the 'phone in her own room to talk to the little lady at the "board."

For the first time since the old office days, the Mackeys meet Merwin. Mackey finds his time very much occupied with his business projects. Mrs. Mackey, though, has plenty on her hands, time to renew old friendship with Merwin. With Ruth they go walking through the pretty city, for her husband is too busy with his affairs to do even that. So Merwin "fills in" nicely as an escort and makes himself very agreeable to the mother and daughter.

But Merwin's designs are not innocent. He tells the wife that he wants her to desert her husband. Instantly she spurns him, and flees from him.

Then some evenings elapse, and putting her daughter to bed, she goes to her husband to find he cannot stay with her even of nights. In a rush of anger, she decides to leave him, and she tells him everything in a note expressing her resentment of his neglect. She tells Merwin on the telephone that she will join him, and the girl at the switchboard happens to hear.

Immediately the "hello girl's" mind is made up. She will act in the wife's own best interests—swiftly. She pulls out the plug connecting the clerk's 'phone with that in the wife's room and switches the wife's line onto the 'phone in little Ruth's room. So instead of falling into Merwin's toils she hears the clear, sweet voice of her child.

The baby's voice acts as cold water on her anger. She is shocked into reason, and rushes to the table on which lays the note, and tears the missive into bits.

In the meantime Merwin tries frantically to get the wife's room on the 'phone again. Finally he does succeed in getting an answer from the brainy "hello girl," who says, "Sorry, but that line is busy." But Merwin sticks to his task and compels the operator to give him the line.

Little Miss Operator, however, has won the great game, for all that, for when the wife does talk to him, she won the great game, for all that, for when the wife does talk to him, she says, "I've changed my mind. I'll not go out this evening."

REPUBLIC.

AN EX-CONVICT'S ORDEAL (March 26.)—Bob Henderson, an ex-convict, becomes acquainted with a religious worker. He starts out for Alaska. With his Alaskan friend he goes through the ice-covered region on a gold searching expedition. He hears a cry of distress and comes in time to rescue a young woman, who is escaping from a pack of timber wolves. Bob saves the woman.

The friendship of the girl and Bob ripens into love and all would go well but for the interference of a young man, who also loves the girl, and having learned Bob's history, tells the girl that her rescuer is an ex-convict. Bob learns of this and decides to leave. When the girl learns that Bob has left, she awakens to the fact that she so truly loves Bob that his past life does not in any way influence her and she helps him to reform by marrying him.

LIFE OR GOLD (March 30).—Jacob Garbell, a miser, is given under compulsion an opportunity to reflect upon his past life and his misdeeds. After having refused to accommodate two honorable men with a much-needed loan, he goes to the cellar where his treasure is hidden and seeks the company of his money bags. Having forgotten the key, and the trap-door falling of its own weight, the miser is imprisoned. After a day and a night of suffering and horror, he is rescued by the two men whom he refused aid, they having returned for a forgotten portfolio. The experience and the agony of the night result in a complete conversion of the miser.

GAUMONT.

HE WHO LAUGHS LAST, LAUGHS BEST (March 26).—Old Herr Reuter, retired bachelor, is smitten with a widow. He declares his love but is rebuffed. Unbaffled by his poor success, Reuter engages the services of a young fellow of charming appearance to win and woo the widow for him, under the pose of his nephew. The supposed nephew makes rapid headway and soon wins the widow's heart, to such an extent that it is impossible to get her to transfer her affections to Herr Reuter. Chagrined the latter orders his employee to leave, only to find that things have advanced too far and that the widow refuses to let her sweetheart get away from her without marriage. Thus the widow, Reuter's supposed nephew, and all the other guests of the hotel, have the laugh on the old gentleman.

JIMMIE AND HIS DONKEY (March 26).—Little Jimmie starts off for the country fair with his donkey only to be intercepted by a thief, who robs him of his faithful animal friend. Jimmie pleads for the beast but all efforts of entreaty prove futile till he secures the aid of a sheriff whom he happens to meet. Even then, Jimmie's arguments are overcome by the cunning of the fellow, until he finally evolves the idea of asking the thief to tell the sheriff in which eye the mule is blind. The first guess is the left and then when found to be wrong, the right, only to learn that the beast has two good eyes. Of course Jimmie walks off with his donkey while the sheriff goes off with the guilty fellow.

THE VILLAGE IDIOT'S GRATITUDE (Mar. 30).—The Village Idiot forms an unusually strong and grateful attachment for a young peasant wife who disperses a tormenting band of children who were tauntingly following him. He follows her to the town pump and carries home her pail of water and later even rescues her young husband from a watery death and tows the boat carrying the fainted wife to safety. None others but the young peasantess, however, are able to thank him because of the fear and dread with which he impresses all his beholders. His fondness for his benefactress persists unto the very end.

ECLAIR.

AT THE HEIGHT OF HER TRIUMPH (March 24.)—Old Brichanteau has adopted an abandoned child. He has brought her up in a very tender and fatherlike way. She is everything to him; he has been her teacher and now she is a talented artist. Success is coming to her fast, but at the same time ingratitude follows. One day, she forgets to come home. In vain old Brichanteau waits for his beloved daughter. Unhappiness breaks the old man down. Unable to quit his room, he always thinks of her. One day, reading a paper, he notices that his daughter has had a great success. Forgetting everything, he sends her a bouquet, but the old servant is unable to deliver the message direct to the girl and the old man goes to sleep crying.

Amongst bunches of flowers, the artist notices a humble bouquet of violets. They must be from a poor lover. She smiles at it, but picks it up. But hardly has she looked at the card attached to it, when she jumps up, crying and kissing the flowers. To the surprise of all, she calls her maid, puts her coat on and goes to old Brichanteau.

The old man is still sleeping. Quietly the door opens, a woman comes in. She kneels down, kisses him and asks for forgiveness. The old man is very happy now, for his dear one won't leave him any more.

ANCIENT PHILAE—Nubia, Egypt (March 24.)—The Island of Philae was, in ancient days, styled "The Peace of Egypt." Its grand edifices and temples, erected two centuries before the Christian Era during the reign of the Ptolemies excited the admiration of the world.

ON THE EVE OF AUSTERLITZ (March 31.)—After a long march, the Emperor is resting in the field of Austria. A little peasant girl accompanied by her mother passes by carrying milk. The child notices the Emperor, and gently approaches him and offers him a drink.

Later on a plot is being laid against the Emperor's life; the father of the little girl is inveigled in same. The conspirators hide themselves in the woodland in wait for Napoleon. He is nearly within reach, when a little girl crosses the way and the Emperor recognizes her. It is the child who a day before so kindly offered him milk. Amused by her kindness he stops and giving her his hand makes her climb up on his knees.

However, the conspirators intend to carry out their plans. They are about to fire upon Napoleon, when suddenly, one of them raises horrified when he sees his daughter in the arms of the Emperor.

Napoleon's men have heard the firing, and th rush toward the scene. The conspirators escap but, in the disorder of this flight, the chief los his hat. An officer carries it to the Emperor. Th Emperor orders the arrest of the first eight notabl of the land, and shows them the hat. The on one who is able to throw any light on the hat the father of the girl, but he refuses to designa the owner.

The little girl, returning home, finds her moth in tears. Papa is being held by the soldiers. Th little one declares she will find the Emperor an plead for her father's life.

Bravely, she calls at the camp. They are drawing lots as to the first man to die. The child chosen to draw the first card and she takes ou the name of her father.

The Emperor is touched at the sorrow of th child, and to show his generosity frees all th prisoners and sends them home full of shame.

REX.

THE PRICE OF MONEY (March 21.)—Whe but a boy he had turned his eager eyes to th wonderland westward. So with a great resolve, little money and much advice, he bade fond goodbyes to the village-folks and left his Germany, sail across the old seas.

Year after year glided by. Year after year th old villagers continued to forget the departe Hans. One day, some nine years after he ha first arrived in the fairy realms, the thought an the desire to return to the home land.

To Germany he went. To the old hut of h old parents he came. It was a balmy day. S Hans hit upon a joke; if his parents did not reco nize him he would ask for lodging as a strange and when the fun had lived several days he woul disclose his real identity.

He was taken into the parents' house, the strange that was their son. To impress them, he too every opportunity that presented itself, and mad others, to make his wealth apparent to his frug elders—and he achieved his purpose in too gre a degree. The money that was intended to aw his parents hypnotized them. In all the days c their lives they had not had the gold which eac day the stranger carelessly cast away. The yello lure entered their hearts and the crimson though came to their minds and the murder of covetousness owned their hands.

In detail to describe the power that staid th murderous hand requires more than the line or tw we have remaining. Suffice it to say that th secret became known to his parents, and tha Hans lived, and loved, in Germany.

THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK (March 24.)—When Howard Velsey came from the medical schoo bringing his diploma—great was the praise of th old farm folks, but none was so proud and happ as his sweetheart, Marion.

But soon after Howard's return he departed agai for the city, to use his learning for the afflicte and the suffering. And Marion wove dreams abou her hero, dreams of many battles with death i which Howard was always the victor, dreams i which the people freed from the slavery of suffering blessed him and lauded his name.

In the city Howard became assistant to a renowned and popular physician, and in his nev duties and new professional life he forgot Marion

When the letters stopped coming she wondere and worried, and determined to come to the cit and seek her sweetheart. The mortar and stee of the city had gone into his heart—so he told he that he could no longer think of her, that he ha become too big and his work too important t give her any attention. So her heart broke a little—and she became a nurse.

A call came one day while the chief was out making his presence imperative at a patient's bedside, and Howard volunteered his services. To hi amazement, when he arrived at the home of th sick, he found Marion, who was there acting a nurse. The surprise of their meeting may hav taken his mind off the patient and his malady, o it may just have been an inadequate knowledge o medicine, but he made a mistake in the prescription; and so a little later, when the nurse telephoned that their patient was dying, the doctor fearing the consequences, refused to return to th sick chamber.

It was Marion who administered the antidot that saved the man's life; it was she who late again telephoned that the man was alive; an when his courage returned and he called, it wa she who refused his offer of marriage, now mad in all sincerity and meekness, telling him that sh had dedicated her life to the ill and afflicted for evermore.

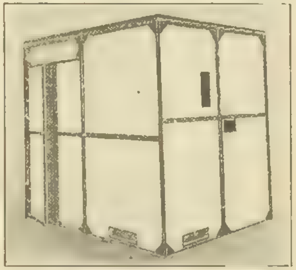
J-M Transite Asbestos Wood Booths

Absolutely Fireproof



J-M Transite Asbestos Wood Booths have many advantages over wood and sheet metal booths. Being made of that indestructible mineral, Asbestos, they are positively fireproof. Asbestos being a non-conductor of electricity, these booths cannot become charged or grounded by an electric circuit. They are also non-conductors of sound, and, unlike metal booths, do not transmit to the audience the noises incident to the operation of the picture machine.

J-M Asbestos Booths conform to all the requirements of state and municipal regulation insurance authorities and inspection departments wherever ordinances compel the use of a fireproof booth. They are made in permanent, and semi-portable types, and can be painted and finished in any manner desired.

and the daring attempt to rescue her, resulting in his capture and being made to run the gauntlet and forced to undergo torture by the squaws.

Thrilling rescue of the prisoners from the Indian camp; sensational battle, as the emigrants swoop down on the redskins; wonderful acting by star artists in the leading parts; massive and colossal cast, amazing in grandeur and magnificence; stages in scenes of wild and wondrous beauty.

THE CRISIS (March 29.)—Disowned by his father for his wild habits, the parson's son meets the crisis of his life, the terrible peril confronting his parents awakening his manhood and exciting him to attempt a daring plan, risking a storm of bullets, to break through the Indian lines and guide the troops to the rescue.

Early western life shown in all detail, the pony express riders changing horses at full gallop, prairie schooners, oxen, Indian villages, etc., etc. Hard pressed by the attacking Indians the parson gathers his flock in the rude church, and the desperate battle is continued.

Receiving word of the Indian uprising, the United States troops ride at break-neck speed to the scene of the conflict. Wonderfully staged battle—amazing feats of horsemanship falls from galloping steeds, etc.

RELIANCE.

HIDE AND SEEK (March 20.)—Jack Porter, a telegraph operator, sells his country property for $10,000 during a land boom. The real estate agent in a neighboring town sends the money by a clerk named Clarkson. Smith, the express agent, directs Clarkson to Porter's home after learning his mission. Clarkson has an overpowering desire to steal the money, and Smith also is tempted. The two men discover each other's thoughts and plan to work together. That evening while Porter is away, they enter the house. Mrs. Porter is playing hide and seek with her little girl, and is seated in a chair, blindfolded. The baby is hiding. The mother is gagged and tied to a chair and the men search the house for the money. When they have left the room the child comes forth, pulls the gag from her mother's mouth and holds the 'phone to her lips so she can telephone. Porter gets the message and races home. Not finding the money the thieves come back to Mrs. Porter and are threatening her with violence if she does not reveal the hiding place when Porter enters with the police, and after a sharp fight the men are arrested.

JEALOUSY (March 23.)—May Barry, a young bride, receives a visit from a girl chum during her husband's absence. In a spirit of mischief the chum dresses up in Barry's clothes, and when Barry comes home unexpectedly Mrs. Barry hides the girl in her room and refuses to permit him to enter. Jealous, he becomes furious, and his wife comes out and is angered and hurt at his suspicion, and refuses an explanation. John hides behind a screen with murder in his heart, and thinking he has gone, the wife's chum runs out. Crushed with shame and regret, Barry pleads with his wife for forgiveness, and realizing that he has had his jealousy cured she grants it.

UP FROM THE PRIMITIVE (March 23.)—This Natural History Subject shows the evolution of the lower forms of mud and water creatures, including poisonous fish from the Ganges river, India; the mud siren, an amphibian (living on air and under water, with gill stalks; the primitive amphibian, called a hellbender, related to frogs and toads, the salamander, a high type of the tailed amphibian; the semi-aquatic frog, practically extinct; the giant toad, the highest type of the tailless amphibian, and the spider toad, which assumes a peculiar, crawling gait.

AMERICAN.

THE TRAMP'S GRATITUDE (March 21.)—Old Bill Meyer was given a position around the yard of the Pacific Lumber Company by the foreman. As the old fellow was destitute of a home, the foreman took him to his house and treated him kindly, thereby winning his gratitude.

Lumber was being stolen from the yard and neither the owners nor the foreman could account for it. One night Meyer, who was accustomed to sleeping on a pile of lumber some distance from the yard, was awakened by the slaming of boards. Looking in the direction of the noise he sees the night watchman's figure retreating in the darkness.

The following day the old man prevents the night watchman from delivering a treacherous blow upon the foreman by jumping between the two men and receiving the blow upon his arm. The foreman takes Meyer home, where his wound is dressed. After he had been given a substantial lunch he repairs to the lumber pile to eat it. There the watchman finds him and relieves him of the lunch.

Hungry and without shelter Meyer passes the night and returns to work the next morning full of resentment. He sees no harm in stealing a few pieces of lumber with which to build a shanty. In the night of that day, the watchman was startled by seeing a board disappear. He gave chase and old Meyer dropped the board in the foreman's yard, where he had instinctively ran for shelter. The watchman sees a chance for diverting the blame from himself and he places more pieces of lumber there. The next day he reports to the owner and accuses the foreman, who, of course, denies it. The matter is finally straightened out by old Bill Meyer, who had overheard the watchman's accusation. The foreman is vindicated, the culprit convicted and Meyer finds a home with the foreman and his wife.

LUX.

ARABELLA BECOMES AN HEIRESS (Mar. 22).—Having served her master faithfully and well Arabella is ever in his thoughts, even in his dying moments. Despite the woebegone expression upon his long lost relatives' faces as they suddenly find themselves upon hearing of his approaching death, Old Moneybags chooses his old servant and leaves her all his money. The "grief-stricken" relatives appear upon the scene later and endeavor to get some of Old Moneybags' legacy. They manage to get the will into their own hands through overcoming the guileless Arabella and are about to turn her out of the house when the lawyer arrives upon the scene and saves the situation.

IN THE BAY OF BISCAY (Mar. 22).—A photographic ramble amid the quaint little towns on the Vendean Coast. Some of the interesting industries of the people are reviewed, and the film terminates in a little trip among the fishing fleet, in which some splendid views are obtained of Sables d'-Oslonne, a picturesque town in the Province of Vendee.

CHAMPION.

A NIGHT'S ADVENTURE (Mar. 25).—Two girl friends accompany a young woman home from the theater, enter the residence and are surprised to find no one at home. The daughter of the house discovers a note informing her that her parents have gone away to spend the night. They retire, but before they do so, they whiten their faces to give them an uncanny appearance.

Two burly colored burglars enter the house and collect loot. While they are thus engaged the trio comes down stairs for a pitcher of water and steal in on the burglars. The nocturnal visitors give one look and flee.

The girls telephone three male friends to come to their rescue. The young men respond to the call but are thoroughly frightened to see what appears to be three ghostly forms looking out of an upper window. They go for a policeman and the quartette breaks into the houpse to find the girls unconsciously masquerading as ghosts. The matter is explained.

THOU SHALT NOT (?) (Mar. 27).—The Reverend John Smith bids his wife good-bye to enjoy a much needed vacation and goes away jubilant. On arriving at the railroad station he discovers that he has left his purse in his "other trousers" and returns home to get the wherewithal for his trip. In his absence Mrs. Smith has engaged a new maid who has locked the doors after Mrs. Smith has gone calling and promptly fallen asleep. The domine finds the doors locked and is in a dilemma. Time is precious and he climbs in the window and proceeds to secure his purse. The maid awakens and sees the intruder whom she mistakes for a burglar. She raises an outcry and Smith is arrested, charged with robbery. In vain he protests and endeavors to explain, but he is treated as a dangerous crook masquerading as a minister. His whiskers are pulled cruelly to test their genuineness. He is locked up with other prisoners and his lot is a hard one as he is jeered by his companions and subjected to ridicule.

The prison is visited by women bent on reform. Smith sees the women and recognizes his wife and stealthily conveys the information to her that he is a prisoner and there is confusion. The minister is equal to the occasion and through the ingenuity of his wife manages to masquerade in his proper person as a minister who has visited the jail to commune with the criminals and exhort them to lead better lives. In this he is aided by the desk sergeant who is made acquainted with the situation.

MAJESTIC.

THE ETERNAL MASCULINE (Mar. 24).—Facing financial ruin, Jack Wilson, a young Wall Street speculator, is given some good advice by his old friend and attorney, first to take a vacation and recover his health, and secondly to marry a girl with money in order to be enabled to enjoy his health. The attorney has been made guardian of a little country girl living alone in a New York state village, whose uncle has left her an income of some $30,000 a year.

The girl in question, Lucy Kern, is a little diamond in the rough but absolutely ignorant of all the graces and tricks which Jack had learned to look for in the woman he was wont to call charming.

Some urgent telegrams from his partner precipitate the course of his suit and he returns to New York with his country bride.

Lucy's lack of manner and distinction and small knowledge of dress are brought painfully home to both her husband and herself, and Jack, in despair over the effect she has produced upon his society friends, takes refuge in his club. Lucy, who is very much in love with her young husband, determines to acquire all that he seems to admire in other women and while he is sojourning away from home a wonderful transformation is effected and a butterfly emerges.

The ever ready third angle of the "Eternal Triangle," soon presents itself in the person one of Jack's friends, a young man about town, a the last weapon that Lucy needs for the comple subjugation of her husband is at her hand. Ja for his part, has found time during his absen from home to realize the many beautiful qualiti of his little country girl and, as Lucy had thoug only a spark of jealousy was needed to bring to flame her husband's love.

OPPORTUNITY (Mar. 26)—John Renton gripp his sister's hand and pointed out a huge billboa It announced that Gouron, "The Violinist of t Century," would favor New York with one reci that evening. Patting her shoulder, he sent h home and betook himself to a poor quarter of t town, and taking his violin from its case beg to play. In the course of an hour, a few penn were bestowed upon him, when suddenly a repr sentative of one of the "finest" brusquely told hi to move on.

At the same time the St. Regis was the sce of great excitement welcoming Gouron, who, company with his manager, Ryler, was maki ready to depart for his recital. Ryler was sum moned ahead, however, and Gouron, accompani by his valet, stepped into his taxi. Fate saw to provide a drunken driver for the great Gouro and in a squalid portion of the city the car ca to an abrupt stop, and Gouron was forced to ma his way on foot. Suddenly Gouron quieted t valet's complaints with an imperative gesture, a turning into a doorway listened intently, for to h sensitive ear came the music of a great soul.

Gouron tiptoed his way toward the source of t exquisite harmony. The musician was Renton.

Gouron was great enough to be above the pet jealousies of a lesser artist and impulsively b coming acquainted with the Rentons and the circumstances, bethought him of a benevolent pl to provide the boy with his opportunity. Gour realized that not one person in the audience wou probably know him by sight, and his plan w nothing less than to have Renton give his recital.

A hurried change of clothes was effected, a the bewildered boy and his awe-struck sister tak to the theater where Gouron forced the unwilli Ryler to accede to his plans, and Ryler in agony of trepidation introduced Renton to th anxiously waiting audience as the great Gouron.

The recital fulfilled Gouron's expectations. Re ton's triumph was immediate and terrific a Gouron himself at the close of the recital stepp upon the stage and taking the trembling boy's ha in his, courageously told the audience of the d ception he had practiced upon them in order th a genius might be presented to the world.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

MR. EXHIBITOR:

FOR YOUR OWN INTEREST, READ THIS

You have a serious problem to solve and you might as well look it square in the face now, for you know you will have to meet it sooner or later, and we believe much sooner than most of you expect.

You all know that the greatest objection to moving pictures to-day is the effect they have on the eyes—but do you know why? Have you played billiards? Every ray of light striking a light-colored surface is thrown back at exactly the same angle at which it strikes that surface, just like a billiard ball striking a cushion, into the eyes of the spectators. On the other hand, if a billiard ball strikes the cushion square and straight, it returns to the starting point. So does a ray of light.

OUR "PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREENS" are so made that every ray strikes the screen straight and is returned to point of projection. Every inch of surface absolutely faces the lens—The shape and not the finish accomplishes this.

We guarantee that a spectator may view a moving picture for hours from any part of the house, with no different effect on the eyes than if he were looking at a stationary picture hung on the wall.

Anyone who has carefully examined our screens will verify the above assertions.

for Chicago. Dick had heretofore experienced very little good fortune, but when one of Milton's friends met him soon after his arrival, and introduced him to the select social circle to which the wealthy Milton belonged, he soon realized that he had stepped into another and worthier man's shoes and proceeded to play the game to the finish. Everywhere he was greeted as Milton and fell heir to Milton's sweetheart, Milton's bachelor apartments and valet, and even to Milton's would-be fiancée, Miss Cynthia Spreckles, the spinster heiress.

Dick is not unmasked, as most impostors are in plays and stories, for he succeeds in winning for himself a blushing bride possessed of more than a comfortable income,—her face not being her fortune. Upon Milton's return from Chicago, that clubman finds himself in the midst of a large hornet's nest and comes near losing his own little sweetheart. The climax of his troubles is reached when Dick has the audacity to confront him and accuse him of trying to impersonate himself.

THE MAJESTIC

IS THE PICTURE OF LIFE!

MAJESTIC PICTURES are not exaggerated to please any one's fancy. They correctly portray the actual happenings in life. They are not overdrawn to the extent of being tiresome but are interesting because of their moral or real heart interest.

When the time comes that the Exhibitor will tell his Exchange just what pictures he will use, the MAJESTIC will be there twice every week.

If the Exhibitor walks into his exchange and says "Please give me the Majestic," he may get them, but if he walks in, head up, and says, "Give me two Majestics, or I'll go where I can get them," he will get what he wants and needs.

We have no way of telling, of course, how many of the real owners of picture theaters go to the exchanges themselves in order to assure their patrons of good clean wholesome shows, but nevertheless it would be very interesting to know.

HERBERT PRIOR

Two Majestics Each Week

MABEL TRUNNELLE

TUESDAY, MARCH 19th, "Leap Year"—a timely farcical love story of complications, good story, beautiful settings and photography.

SUNDAY, MARCH 24th, "The Eternal Masculine"—a comedy of sentiment—showing that it does not pay for a husband to be ashamed of his wife—clever in every particular.

TUESDAY, MARCH 26th, "Opportunity"—a comedy of Bohemian life.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31st, "The Lighted Candle," a strong drama.

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism and revision for a fee of only $2.

REVISION—Scenarios having a reasonable chance of a sale will be edited and revised and a typewritten copy supplied for one dollar per finished page. Send the manuscript and a reading fee of one dollar. If the scenario will not warrant further expense, it will be returned to you; if it does, you will be advised as to full cost. Please note that this covers no criticism.

Exhibitors!

Submit your difficulties to the author of "The Photoplay Theater," and other articles on management, for advice and suggestion, the result of twenty years' experience in amusement enterprises. Simple questions $1 each.

BUCK'S TREACHERY DISCOVERED

THE REMITTANCE MAN

Cecil Rand is allowed a monthly remittance by his brother, Earl of Essex, and sent to Western America to make a man of himself. His sporty English clothes amuse the miners and bring forth the banter of one "Buck," a gambler, which Rand resents with a blow that knocks Buck out. Helen Evans takes an interest in Rand and secures him a job in her father's mine. Buck likes Helen too, and to get even with Rand cuts the rope on which he supposes the Englishman will be lowered into the mine. But Mr. Evans coming first, is the victim, and Helen hearing of the accident promises to marry the one who shall save her father's life. Buck rescues him and claims the bride, but the telltale knife is found and he is arrested. Rand receives news that he has inherited his brother's title and estate, and invites Helen to share it with him.

OUR

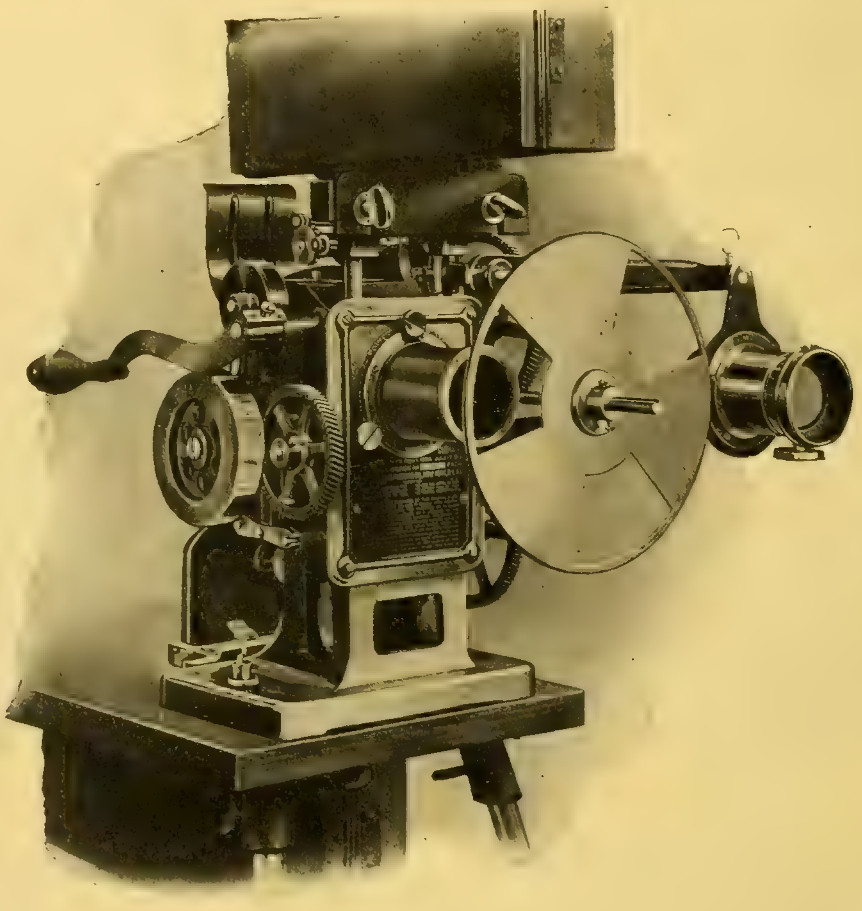
is perfect projection; that is why

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH Always Wins



The "just as good" may answer in some lines, but not in yours, Mr. Showman. You must have the best. Your audience demands it. You must show them pictures which are absolutely without flicker, which ring true in the fidelity of their reproduction; and that's all they want.

What you want beside this is a machine which may be easily operated, whose parts are easy of access, simple in construction yet firm and rigid of frame, built to stand the daily grind. All these things we accomplish.

When satisfaction is brought to both audience and operator, then is produced the perfect moving picture machine; and that's what POWER'S No. 6 is.

It satisfies. That's why its sales represent more than 60% of the entire yearly output of all moving picture machines combined.

Isn't that good enough for you?

Proposition G will tell you all about it.

The Star of the Side Show

All the Thanhouser favorites become "freaks" in this film for your edification. They quit being Romeos and Juliets, Nicklebys and Copperfields and turn into midgets, giants, snake charmers, bearded ladies, fat ladies and so on. The very NOVELTY OF IT will stun you! We turned our studio into a museum for a week TO DELIVER THIS TO YOU.

RELEASED FRIDAY, APRIL 5

Photofans, to Florida!

The Girl of the Grove

Perhaps our Florida pictures' biggest bid for popularity was on their unusual settings, the locations and backgrounds that St. Augustine and thereabouts alone can boast. The stories, of course, were always "there," but they were dressed in such rich settings that the latter got your approval, too—which is new for mere settings. THE "MERE SETTINGS" OF THIS REEL ARE AN ORANGE GROVE. Prepare for a Scenic Surprise!

A Romance of the Underworld

Released Wed., April 24th

Released Wednesday, April 3d

The Witch's Necklace

Misguided by curiosity and stubbornness, a woman tourist journeying through a beautiful and romantic locality (the Garden of the Gods) is possessed of a longing for a mysterious necklace which she sees in the cave of a witch. After having long harbored thoughts of possession, the magic necklace begins to haunt the miserable woman in both her sleeping and waking hours. She is about to commit suicide, thinking the necklace is strangling her, when she is awakened.

Released Friday, April 5th

Billy's Troublesome Grip

A comedy with photographic tricks and novel stunts. Billy has a recalcitrant grip. He tries to "shake it," but it pursues him with the dogged insistence of fate. The fun starts when Billy Quirk leaves home in the morning with a grip full of important papers. Absent-minded Billy mistakes a grip belonging to Mrs. Uneven Temper for his own. When he wants to lay his hands on the papers he finds some lingerie and false hair. Billy collapses. Billy Quirk, Fannie Simpson, Marian Swayne and twenty comedians help along the fun.

TUESDAY, APRIL 2nd

"Two Women"

Fate plays queer pranks but never a queerer one than the bringing together and falling in love of a widow and the man who has accidentally killed her husband many years ago. Her rage is boundless when she learns the truth. Without hearing his side of the story, she informs the police but repents when she hears her husband has not been worthy. It is all but too late for him to escape and the picture is brought to a breathless climax as she helps him over the border to "married" freedom.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6th

"A Dual Personality"

WHEN A MAN MARRIES—That ends the story—but—when he leaves his bride "waiting at the church" many thrilling things may happen. Has he lost his nerve? does he no longer love her??—has a jealous suitor kidnapped him??? The solution of the mystery is the theme of this story—and wide will go your eyes with astonishment when you see what really befalls him.

Can you use a 15x18 combination photograph of our companies, neatly framed in mission—of course?—then forward one dollar and 'tis yours; express prepaid.

SENSATIONAL TWO-REEL FEATURES

"BLAZING THE TRAIL"

Released Friday, April 5th

Showing the trail of civilization across the Western country; the emigrant train; the Cooper family; the treachery of the Indians; the capture of Helen Cooper, her sweetheart's daring attempt to rescue her, resulting in his capture and being made to run the gauntlet and forced to undergo torture by the squaws.

Thrilling rescue of the prisoners from the Indian camp; sensational battle, as the emigrants swoop down on the redskins; wonderful acting by star artists in the leading parts; massive and colossal cast, amazing in grandeur and magnificence; staged in scenes of wild and wondrous beauty.

"THE CRISIS"

Released Friday, April 12th

Disowned by his father for his wild habits, the parson's son meets the crisis of his life, the terrible peril confronting his parents awakening his manhood and exciting him to attempt a daring plan, risking a storm of bullets, to break through the Indian lines and guide the troops to the rescue.

Early Western life shown in all detail: the pony express riders changing horses at full gallop, prairie schooners, oxen, Indian villages, etc., etc.

Hard pressed by the attacking Indians, the parson gathers his flock in the rude church, and the desperate battle is continued.

Receiving word of the Indian uprising, the U. S. Troops ride at break-neck speed to the scene of the conflict.

Facts and Comments

BY the sweeping decision of a divided bench the Supreme Court of the United States has recently conferred extraordinary rights and privileges upon patentees. No question is of more vital interest to the moving picture industry than the patent problem. When the highest tribunal of the land defines with circumstantial precision just how far the rights of a patentee extend we may well devote our time to a little consideration of the subject. It appears that the text of the decision assures to the patentee not only the old right to shut out everybody else from the use of his invention, but goes a great step further by enabling the patentee to prescribe the exact conditions under which the patent may be used by others. The patentee seems to have the right to decide what articles, supplies or accessories shall be used by his licensee, though none of the latter things may be patented at all. In the case before the court a patentee contended that his machine could not be used by the licensee, unless the licensee bought whatever was needed to operate the machine from the patentee or under the patentee's order and direction. The attorney-general of the Federal Government who had fought hard for a restriction of patentee's rights and who was looking for a decision, which would put him in a position to prosecute several alleged monopolies, suffered a signal defeat. The last word has not, however, been spoken. The majority in favor of the decision was a majority of one and as there was not a full bench it is more than likely that the proposed motion for a rehearing will be granted. The history of the income tax decision reminds us of the possibility of a great change in important cases in a short space of time. There is a very strong dissenting opinion, which is well worth reading. In any event the decision is likely to be robbed of much of its force by legislation. Immediately after the announcement of the decision a great number of measures were introduced in the lower house of Congress seeking to limit the extraordinary powers of patentees as interpreted by the Supreme Court.

WE are reminded of the fact that Belgium is on the map by the indignant protest of a paper published in that country against our assertion that the American film sustains a far higher average of quality than the European product. The writer, who signs himself "A Countryman of Europe," asks what he calls the "American bluffers" to name some American-made films, that come up to the standard of such films as "Nero," "The Slaves of Carthage," "Vertigo," "Calvary," and others. We want to say to our excited Belgian friend, whose letter is printed with much gusto in the British papers, that as for "Nero" the Edison Company released a magnificent production of that name more than four years ago. How does he class such recent American features as "Cinderella," "Vanity Fair," "Foul Play," "David Copperfield," "Nicholas Nickleby"? If his taste runs to classics we will name "Damon and Pythias," if to religious subjects "The Life of Moses." He probably has more time than we and if he will look through the files of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD he will be able to find many more such subjects treated by American manufacturers. We have never heard of a reel called "Vertigo," but would like to know more about it. The only Vertigo we ever heard of is the unpleasant twin sister of Lumbago. Let us have the scenario and synopsis of "Vertigo," you brave Belgian bullfighter.

IN one of the daily papers in this city a controversy is raging between the friends of the drama and the novel respectively. Both factions claim to have exerted the greater influence upon mankind. We would like to call the attention of the combatants to the motion picture, which leaves drama and novel so far behind, that their race for second place ceases to be interesting. Let the parties to the controversy go back for a moment to ancient Greece, where theaters with a seating capacity of ten thousand were by no means rare. This was, of course, many centuries before the invention of printing, but who will deny that the civilization of Greece, the finest the world has ever seen, was not profoundly influenced by its dramas? Practically every Greek was a theatergoer. With the increasing sway of the motion picture theater it may safely be predicted that in a very few years practically every American will be a theatergoer. What we see far more than what we read about influences our mind and our whole spiritual nature. How, then, can the novel or even the newspaper compare with the silent drama. On that empire the sun never sets. Its influence is not only wide, but deep as well. Foolish disputants about influence of stage and novel. The prize has passed into other hands and you are fighting about a mere figment of your own imagination.

IN Denver the Sunday and the moving picture are the best of friends. A reader and well-wisher of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes us from Denver that two shows are given every Sunday in the Denver Auditorium. Of course there had been a bitter fight before reason and common sense gained the victory. As our Denver friend puts it, "When we first started, the long-haired men and short-haired women as well as religious sharps and sharks rolled their eyes toward heaven and condemned the entire community to all sorts of damnation on account of what they designated the violation of the Sabbath." One of the highest officials in the city, speaking of the Sunday motion picture entertainments in the Auditorium, remarked that he believed Sunday concerts and moving pictures at the Auditorium saved more girls from ruin than any other fact in the municipal life of Denver. We are glad to give the next Denver Sunday program in full for the benefit of other exhibitors. One feature is the Edison picture, "How Moving Pictures Are Made" and the other reels show views of Cincinnati and Japan. Our correspondent adds, "The latter is especially appropriate in Denver, because it gives us some novel ideas for children's playgrounds, which are very popular in this city."

We like to give credit in this connection to the preacher, F. B. Smith, whose intemperate attacks on motion pictures generally we have had recent occasion to rebuke. After seeing the entertainments given on Sunday in the Denver Auditorium he reversed himself and declared what he saw to be "a clean, wholesome form of entertainment for our citizens." He still condemns the cheap vulgar shows and in that respect he only voices the sentiments of thousands of others. We have often pointed out in these columns that many of the present enemies of the motion picture are simply ignorant of the motion picture as it exists to-day and honest and open-minded enough to be converted. When a notorious fanatic like this F. B. Smith succumbs to the ocular proof of the truth, there is hope for all. In less than three years from now the man inveighing against motion pictures will be interesting and valuable only as a specimen of a nearly extinct type. It will then be in order to make a thorough cinematographic record of him and deposit him in the "Museum of Archaic Curiosities." Too bad the witch-burners of olden tmes were not thus preserved for us cinematographically. We could then study them in comparison with their latter-day incarnations.

Let Us Strike Back.

IT is a fact well known even beyond the limits of the moving picture industry that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has at all times stood for clean shows and for clean methods. Time and again we have in unmistakable terms defined our opposition to every influence that seeks to drag down the moving picture. It has made no difference to us where such influences manifested themselves, whether in the exhibiting or in the manufacturing branch of the industry. We have also advised exhibitors at all times to be conscientious observers of the law, even when the law seemed plainly unreasonable and oppressive. The way to get rid of an obnoxious statute is by agitation for its repeal and not by violations. We are not likely therefore to err on the side of too much leniency in treating the question of law breaking.

We feel now that it is our duty first to enter an emphatic protest against the continued willful, deliberate and malicious slanders and libels persisted in by the yellow journals, and secondly to advise exhibitors to strike back at the slanderers and libelers.

The occasion of these remarks is furnished by a scandalous and contemptible article in the "New York World." We quote from the headlines printed in big, black type and prominently displayed at the top of a page:

"Many girls have fallen victims to picture show men. Over twenty of the latter arrested in Brooklyn within the last six months, accused of assaults!"

It is a notorious trick of yellow journalism to set forth in its headlines the promise of a salacious scandal which the text of the article out of due regard to the law of libel invariably fails to keep. The article, a column in length, does not pretend to furnish the proof of the assertion so boldly made in the headlines. No specific facts and no names are furnished, but there is the usual indiscriminate abuse of motion pictures in general. If, as the article in its headlines claims, it is true that half the shows "break the law" and that "there is evidence to show that the employees of some of these moving picture shows are cadets," then this evidence ought to be forthwith submitted to a Grand Jury for action and all the power of our legal machinery ought to be set in motion to convict the alleged offenders. If on the other hand these assertions are groundless and spread upon the pages of yellow journals with the intention of stimulating circulation by printing sensational lies, every single individual directly or indirectly connected with the moving picture industry ought to take warning and withdraw his patronage from such jaundiced sheets and exert all his influence against them in every legitimate manner. If there are any organizations of exhibitors capable of understanding the importance of refuting, resisting and resenting such slanders and libels, they ought to without delay define their attitude and by all methods known to publicity agents declare their position to the public which reads the newspapers.

The article which prints the deliberate falsehood in its caption, when analyzed, shows nothing more than that a moving picture operator was arrested for taking a girl under the age of consent to a hotel. There has been no trial and the man may be entirely innocent. Indeed, according to our law he is to be considered innocent until proven guilty. To base upon the mere fact of one single arrest such outrageous accusations against exhibitors generally and against the moving picture industry proves once more what is known to all intelligent and thinking Americans of to-day, to wit: that yellow journalism is a distinct and powerful menace to our civilization.

We note that the yellow journal above quoted cites in support of its indiscriminate and vague charges certain officers of a certain Children's Society. The intelligent public long ago have formed their opinion of these societies. They subsist very largely upon contributions from the general public and sensational tirades are like the breath of life to them.

It is a notorious fact that such societies in their eagerness to make what they call a good showing and invite contributions are not very scrupulous about the statistics that they compile and are very fond of dealing in glittering and sensational generalities. It is now generally believed that whatever little good such societies may have done in the past they have largely outlived their usefulness in the present. A careful and conscientious journalism would, therefore, sift with suspicious care any statement coming from such societies in search of self-advertisement. Yellow journalism, however, being engaged in much the same business of dishing up scandal and sensations, instead of scrutinizing such statements, welcomes them and is glad to swallow them whole.

While the defamers confine themselves to allegations of a general nature and fail to mention names and places the law of libel cannot reach them and they are absolutely safe from prosecution of any sort. Hiding behind the inadequacy of the law they besmirch and blacken bodies of men who compare favorably with any other group of men in the community. There is now a minister of the Gospel awaiting execution for the most dastardly murder which has been recorded in the annals of mankind. No decent human being will draw conclusions against the ministry as a body from behind this isolated fact.

Knowing as we do the personnel of exhibitors, their conscientious endeavor to live up to the law and the many hardships that they have to contend with in patience and perseverence, such a vile libel fills us with the utmost indignation and resentment. If at any time hereafter any representative of the yellow journals unjustly and unfairly reflects upon an individual engaged in the exhibition business, naming such individual and likewise his place of business, we will guarantee to invoke the law of the land and prosecute civilly and criminally to the last limit of the law the person or the paper that commits the libel. We ask every exhibitor who feels that he has a just grievance by reason of defamatory articles published in the newspapers to submit his case to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and we will see to it that every remedy afforded by the law is exhausted in order to vindicate him and rebuke the libelers.

Studio Saunterings

By Louis Reeves Harrison

Mr. Lubin "On the Job."

COURTESY and hospitality could not be exceeded in a city justly celebrated for both in the kindly reception extended at Lubin's great plant. My impression of the exterior was not, however, particularly promising. It was not unlike that made on the mind of a cynical New Yorker visiting the City of Brotherly Love for the first time—when told that the big town was well laid out, he remarked that it was the only proper treatment to be accorded anything so obviously dead. The grim walls and severe buildings of the Lubin plant held forth no artistic allurements, but, once inside, the mysteries of the forbidden temple unveiled, there was plenty of energy and life visible, and throughout the tremendous activities of the place there was a delightful air of informality that proceeded from the owner himself.

The Big Chief dominates the entire situation. Mr. Lowery, general manager, has that natural kindness of heart which usually accompanies breadth of mind, his welcome was that of an affable and polished gentleman, but the Big Chief has the characteristics of an American pioneer, who had the hardy courage and vigorous endurance to clear the way for others whether in opening up a country or in overcoming obstructions in a new department of human enterprise. Mr. Lubin was constructed mentally and physically to stand the strain of hardship and discouragement often presented in the early development of the fascinating New Art.

In personal appearance Mr. Lubin is not unlike a man who protrays elderly roles in the Lubin photoplays, only the Big Chief's height and unconventional dignity makes him the "Noblest Roman of them all," with a humanizing admixture of offhand good humor. When he took me to see the first picture he ever produced—of course it was "Uncle Tom's Cabin"—he was for a moment exasperated that it could not be found, but his April outburst was soon followed by sunshine. He warned me with an ill-concealed chuckle to keep a straight face during the exhibition of this precious relic of antiquity. "You may laugh," he said, in anticipation that I would, "but please do not laugh out loud—I am in the picture." Sure enough he was. If I remember rightly he was among those bidding at the sale of Uncle Tom. There were crudities in the ancient presentation—in one case the light from a window was painted on a wall—but I did not see anything to laugh at in spite of the fact that others seemed to be amused. Perhaps I was in closer, unconscious sympathy with the Big Chief sitting beside me in his shirt sleeves with his cap tipped back on his head than those who could only see the result without considering the work it involved, and the fact that he showed it at all revealed a certain manly lack of pretense not conspicuous among producers.

Conspicuous for its absence was any attempt to tell me what wonderful productions by marvelous actors under accomplished direction the Lubin plant was turning out. I was accorded sufficient common sense and good taste to judge for myself, but the Big Chief exhibited a natural and commendable pride in that part of the production of moving pictures which is rarely considered by those of us in front who give our silent support to the little entertainments when we are pleased and equally silent absenteeism when we are dissatisfied. Mechanical details are little considered by mixed audiences all over the country, because no conception of their importance can exist except among those engaged in the work or among the few outsiders accorded a view of inside operations, but the exceptionally fine visuality of Lubin photoplays is wholly due to mastery of all that serves in handling the sensitized films so as to clearly unfold without marring or distracting blemishes the acted photoplay by Mr. Lubin himself. He is and always has been at the head of this essential department. Though his activities extend over all others, this is his specialty.

As far as the plays are concerned I think he aims at entertaining those who frequent the picture shows with light comedies. I have enjoyed some of them and some of them have not appealed to me at all. These columns contain only my personal impressions of what I see, and I may be at fault as well as another, but I think a loud laugh usually follows a loud story. Many a Vodeveal performer has been able to recline on a confidence in himself that was deeply upholstered by the hysterical giggle of Bridget in an orchestra seat of a rainy evening when her master did not care to use tickets purchased for the occasion. A few laughs from the easily-amused do not make comedy that will induce the better class to come again. Slapstick drives away more people than it draws. On the other hand, I have seen an entire audience convulsed over a Lubin comedy that contained nothing offensive to common, ordinary American intelligence. Further than that, I think the trend of Lubin comedy is upward. Some of the recent ones have been replete with beautiful costumes and settings, a credit to the directors from whose hands they came, and possessing that charm for the sympathetic mind that is far more difficult to define than to appreciate.

We all know that beauty is not universal in our products, but we like it none the less on that account. Our home-loving wives and mothers,—and they constitute a heavy percentage of picture show patrons,—are not easily deceived by the assumptions of those who think they know how to set a boudoir or drawing room; they are not fooled by made-over robes from the property room, and they enjoy whatever appeals to their esthetic perceptions. No drawing room fittings ever looked nicer in high life than some of the recent Lubin settings, and as for gowns—it was like going over to the horse show or strolling in the lobby of the Metropolitan Opera House to gaze on the silks and satins that shone and shimmered in some of the late Lubin comedies. If they keep on this way, women will go to the "movies" instead of taking fashion magazines to get a view of the styles.

IRA. M. LOWERY
Secretary and General Manager
Lubin Co.

It may be thought that I lay too much stress on beauty. What utility does it serve? We are dealing with plays written and produced for the purpose of attracting people of all classes to the little theaters, what these plays contain is enlivened with emotions that are, themselves, tinged and hued with mental color, and there is an appropriateness in what is served with them that must be considered. Which cowboy play do you like best, the one on a background of barren fields and dirty shacks or the one showing noble scenery wherever there is outdoor action? It is in us to love what is beautiful in Nature, and Art is at its best when it idealizes Nature's loveliness. While these little plays are revealing phases of human destiny hidden from most of us, they might as well, at the same time, stir us with beauty that is personal or impersonal as the case may be. We may be certain that it will never detract from the value of what is presented, to the contrary, it will add to the worth of any photodrama shown and in that way contribute to the interest of all concerned.

Mr. Lubin has built a studio for great accomplishments, the largest in the country, but big as it is in producing capacity and promise, it but reflects the man who brought it into existence.

London Letter.

By E. J. M.

London, March 6, 1912.

AT LAST the exhibitors on this side are banding themselves together for the benefit of their mutual interests, and the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland is an accomplished fact. That it is not a moment too soon is acknowledged by every manufacturer, renter and exhibitor throughout the country, but an extremely strong and representative executive committee has already got to work and is grappling with several problems with which picture theater proprietors are face to face. The new body is in no way antagonistic to the Manufacturers' and Renters' Associations, in proof whereof the joint committee of the two latter bodies last week received a sub-committee of the Exhibitors' Association and discussed several important subjects with them. The offices of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association are temporarily situated at No. 16 Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, London, W. C., but a move will shortly be made into permanent quarters.

Censorship Question.

Shall films be censored? is the topic of the day, and, to the credit of the trade in general, it must at once be placed on record that it is admitted that some form of censorship is desirable. Undoubtedly the percentage of questionable films is extremely small, but it is just that little minority which have caused moving pictures to be adversely criticised in many quarters. The subjects to which objection is made emanate mainly from continental sources and they are not so much immoral, as suggestive, and are not so very bad at that. Nevertheless, public opinion has to be considered and it is up to every member of the industry to insist that the moral tone of all films shown in this country shall be absolutely above reproach.

A few days ago the Home Secretary received a deputation representing all sections of the moving picture industry, and in the course of an interesting speech he said, that in his view, the government would prefer the trade to do its own censoring and not be subject to direct official control. He warmly approved the suggestion that a distinguishing sign should be hung outside every picture theater, showing exclusively films which had been passed by the censor. Reading between the lines it is apparent that, if the government approves of the methods adopted by the trade for the suppression of questionable subjects or parts thereof, it will not take any further action in the matter.

Feature Films Numerous.

The regular renting business is being considerably upset by the deluge of so-called "exclusive" and "feature films," which has descended of late. These films are mostly rented upon the one-town, one-booking principle, independently of the ordinary film hiring arrangements. The result is that renters are constantly receiving telegrams something like this: "Send only 2,500 feet next change. Have booked on exclusive." Seeing that the renter thus loses half his bookings—often at the last moment—it is hardly surprising that "exclusives" are not over-popular with him.

Hispano films "from Sunny Spain" are being handled here by the European Film Agency, 58 Dean Street, London, W., and I understand that American rights can be retained. Please don't all write at once. Joking apart, Hispano films are right above the ordinary run, the photography in particular being superb. Their film "Carmen" was bought exclusively for England by the Gaumont Company; for Australia by Mr. T. J. West, and by the African Film Syndicate for South Africa.

The Kinematograph Trading Co., Ltd., announce change of address from 3 Macclesfield St., London, to much larger premises at 55-59 Shaftesbury Avenue, same city.

Moss Empires, Ltd., one of the largest music hall syndicates in the country, has entered the film renting business, with offices at Ryder's Court, London, W. C.

A new trade paper has made its appearance under the title of "The Cinema." It is a monthly publication edited by Mr. Lew Warren, who has been associated with "The Times," and other well-known daily papers, and, judging by the get-up of the first two issues, its success is already assured. The offices of "The Cinema" are situated at 21 North Audley Street, London, W., and a specimen copy will be sent free to all readers who mention the Moving Picture World in their application. By the way, ask for the March issue. It contains an excellent appreciation of H. A. Spoor, London Agent of the Essanay Company.

The Humanity Story-Film Company has been registered with a capital of £2,000, with offices at Dudley House, 36-38 Southampton Street, Strand, London. The head of the new concern is G. W. Jones, a man who has been intimately identified with the moving picture industry for nearly seventeen years, and was, until recently, general manager of the Co-operative Cinematograph Company. Mr. Jones has hit upon rather a new idea. He has obtained the sole cinematograph rights for the serial and short stories appearing in a number of popular magazines, and he will thus be in the lucky position of having a ready-made market for his films as they are produced. Naturally he will get some advertising in the magazines, so he is apparently on a good thing.

The March issue of the "Quiver" Magazine contains an interesting article entitled "The Picture Palace; How Are We to Regard It?" It is described as the first serious attempt to define what should be the attitude of the church to the Cinematograph theater. Amongst the contributors to the article are the Rev. F. B. Meyer, Ven. Archdeacon Madden, the Bishop of Stepney, Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, and other well-known clergymen. The "Quiver" is published by Cassell Company and should be obtainable at their New York office. Another English magazine, "The Strand," published an article entitled "Tricks of the Cinematograph" in the February issue.

The Moving Picture Educator

"YOU REMEMBER ELLEN."

This Kalem picture illustrating Moore's poem is excellent. There are many reasons why it may be classed with those worthy of use for educational purposes. The story is clean, safe and sane, the acting good, the portraiture excellent, and especially and above all, the truthfulness of the surroundings.

Probably the Kalem firm have not produced a more perfect, helpful and instructive Irish picture The native beauties of "Old Ireland" are most attractive, making it a question if the picture does not excel in the presentation of Irish scenery and life rather than in the beauty of the story.

There are many little details in this beautiful film which perhaps escape the casual observer, but which are of interest to the student; as for instance, when William first meets Ellen she has just filled her basket with "peat," the common fuel of the Irish peasantry.

This thoroughness of local and native detail gives educational value to the picture, and it may well be said that besides picturing the poem of "You Remember Ellen" the film is descriptive of Irish scenery, life and customs.

"OEDIPUS REX."

An eminent critic declares that the "Oedipus Rex" in Kinemacolor as at present shown may be more valuable in schools and colleges than in the theater. While giving full credit to the production as being "what the public expects of Kinemacolor" he goes on to say that, "being compressed into three-quarters of an hour means a rather merciless treatment of the stately Greek tragedy." The idea of the critic that this is too feeble an effort for so great a subject need not necessarily mean that his suggestion that "the stately Greek drama is beyond the sphere of the moving picture" shall be taken seriously.

There is no doubt that Kinemacolor produced "Oedipus Rex" in an abbreviated form for the purpose of being accompanied by the explanatory remarks by Mr. Ben Greet, who also reads from Gilbert Murray's translations. The worthy critic should take into consideration that the abbreviation of this reproduction is wilful, as it is not intended to take up an evening as he suggests it should. Furthermore, is it not but a beginning of the larger field in which Kinemacolor intends to work? If, therefore, this curtailed, yet explained, reproduction is satisfactory as far as it goes, the future is assured.

NOTES.

Lessons in Writing. To those interested in teaching by cinematography, there must have come the suggestion of teaching penmanship when the writing of "Kalem" is seen on the screen after any Kalem picture. All teachers are not able to teach writing, although expected to do so; it can be readily seen that their own faultiness is transmitted to the scholar. The method of holding the pen is of great importance and the teacher's own habit, good or bad, is readily copied.

It is a common report from business houses that bad writing is the most frequent fault of school graduates. Given a standard, a method and an example, a uniform and universal system is at the service of the schools by the cinematographic teacher.

Naming a State. The pictures of the signing of the Arizona State Bill by President Taft (Vitagraph) will be an extremely interesting one to school children in all parts of the States. The detail of the portraiture is most noticeable, it almost seems possible to follow each letter of the President's name as shown by the motion of the hand; this is especially so when compared with the "make believe" method of writing by the actor letter writer which is always such an apparent mockery as to be absurd. Picture of the President and his cabinet in executive session is also worthy of notice, as an indoor picture it is of course somewhat lacking in detail, but the general effect is instructive.

Hop Picking. This Vitagraph industrial picture taken in the famous hop-growing fields of the county of Kent in England is a very thorough one and worthy of notice. From seed to brewery the whole process is given in detail with a completeness worthy of imitation in many other subjects. Our friends of Vitagraph fame have not been large contributors to any branch of educational film. If "hop picking" is a sample of their possibilities it is to be hoped that their productions along these lines may be largely increased.

Indian Life and Customs. Chief Dark Cloud, a full-blooded Indian chief and one of the most intelligent and educated of his race, is giving lectures on Indian life and customs wherever possible; these lectures are both interesting and instructive and will prove invaluable to the youth of the present generation who are perhaps witnessing the last of this great and wonderful people which first inhabited this continent. Chief Dark Cloud also explains two pictures, "The Sioux Cave of Death" and "The Indian's Pride" (Pathe), in which he personally appears in the principal parts, thus giving an unusual interest to them. Dove Eye, the squaw of Dark Cloud, accompanies him, adding to the value of the entertainment.

It is becoming a usual thing now among the "400" of New York to include a series of moving pictures at their receptions. Society notes frequently mention the fact. When culture joins educative fundamentals in lifting up that which is good and profitable its greater efficiency is secured.

HARRY FURNISS IN EDISON PICTURES.

Famous British Cartoonist Will Work Out Some Novel Ideas for the "Movies."

With the arrival of the S. S. Lusitania last week there came to these shores Mr. Harry Furniss, famous the world over as a cartoonist, who will appear in a series of pictures to be made by the Edison Company after a few novel ideas of his own. While the plan, in the main, has been decided upon, the details have not yet been worked out to a point that will permit of publication. Mr. Furniss has been busy since his arrival at the Edison studios going over the plans with Mr H. G. Plimpton, manager of production for the Edison Company.

Regarding the character of these pictures, Mr. Plimpton said that they would feature Mr. Furniss in his role of cartoonist as a central figure of special stories; also, that some of his big art productions would probably be utilized in other pictures.

In a few moments' conversation had with Mr. Furniss, a representative of the Moving Picture World learned that he would remain in the United States for at least a month and that most of that time would be occupied in this special work. Mr. Furniss is an enthusiastic picture fan and keeps in close touch with the development of the business.

"It is most remarkable," he said, "what a wonderful growth the business has had. The music halls throughout England, where a few years ago I gave my illustrated lectures, have since been turned into picture houses and almost everybody patronizes them."

Mr. Furniss has been in New York before and recalled with considerable satisfaction a certain dinner party of politicians of high degree which occurred at old Delmonico's upon the eve of a National election and at which he was the only stranger present. "I enjoyed the affair immensely, but, do you know, I never have been able to get your politics straight. You do things quite differently over here, you know."

Mr. Furniss said that he had been entertaining newspaper men by the score since his arrival, but promised to let the readers of the World hear more from him before he retuned to London.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

THE hearing of arguments for and against the proposed amendment to the ordinance regulating the attendance of minors at picture theaters, took place Monday afternoon, March 18, in the City Council chamber, before the executive committee. The galleries were filled to overflowing by friends of the exhibitors and the seats in the chamber proper were nearly all occupied by the speakers for both sides.

The chairman of the committee announced that the number of speakers on each side would be limited to six, and that each speaker should have five minutes, the side in favor of the amendment to furnish the first speaker and the opposition the second, and so on alternately. Either side, at option, could divide the time allotted between two or three speakers, as might be deemed best.

It is not necessary in this article to give the speeches in detail. One of the astounding features of the arguments of those representing the women's clubs of Chicago was the admission that the danger to minors did not lie in their going into picture theaters, but in their going to and from the theaters, on the streets. In other words, the dangers of the streets and not the dangers of picture theaters were aimed at in the proposed amendment.

It was interesting to recall a speech made by one of the ladies at the former meeting, two weeks before, in which she classified picture theaters as being decidedly immoral and that to prmit children to attend them was all wrong. "Everyone has a nickel, and so everyone can attend such places," the lady said as near as can be recalled. Such associations were most undesirable and could only level downwards, in her opinion.

The change of heart, or of viewpoint, so marked in the stand taken by the ladies at the last meeting, showed conclusively that they had been making investigations during the two weeks' interval, and had found that within picture theaters in Chicago the proprietors and their employees were alert and watchful in preserving order and decent conduct among their audiences. Furthermore, that the dark house is a rarity and that pictures are shown in well-lighted houses.

As the discussion proceeded it was easily foreseen that the amendment was doomed. If passed, it would prevent children under 16 or 14 years from attending any amusement place, of whatever kind, unless escorted by their parents or an adult. Church musicales, the various recreations offered by the United Societies, the evening visits to the parks during the scorching summer weather, etc., would all come under the ban of the amended ordinance, working endless hardship and leading to innumerable violations of the ordinance.

A death blow was struck when Delegate O'Neil, of the Chicago Federation of Labor, was recognized by the chair and read the following report of the action of the executive board at the last meeting of the Federation:

"After full discussion, the executive board voted against the proposed change in the city ordinance now pending before the committee on judiciary, that children under sixteen be prohibited from attending nickel shows without being accompanied by their parents.

"Fully recognizing the desire of Mrs. Newton and her fellow-workers to protect the children, the executive board yet feels that this will not be accomplished by this proposed amendment to the city ordinance. This proposed protection does not in any way affect the thousands of children who are under the care and control of their parents. It is doubtless meant for those who, living without such control, congregate on the streets at night and frequent the nickel shows. The executive board feels that it is better for such neglected children to attend the nickel shows, which to-day are so carefully censored by the city, than to congregate at street corners or find their way into saloons or cheap dance halls. There is also the added danger that the children, so restricted, may be emboldened to ask strangers to escort them into the theater.

"In conclusion, the executive board asks the co-operation of the women's clubs of the city of Chicago to help in the abolishment of child labor on the streets, in the factories and in the sweat shops of our city, certain that this is the greater menace and danger to the homes and to the children of Chicago."

The following speech by L. Schindler, proprietor of the Schindler Theater, 1035 W. Huron Street, had also great weight with the members of the executive committee:

L. Schindler's Speech.

I represent the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois, the Chicago branch, which has three hundred members. This association was formed for the betterment of conditions in the moving picture field. We are from time to time regulating everything that will tend to elevate this enterprise. We are continually co-operating with the diffierent departments of the city to live up to all regulations laid down by these different departments.

There has been a committee before you, trying to get a law passed, prohibiting children under the age of sixteen years from attending any place of amusement, when not accompanied by their parents or an escort. This proposed law aims directly at the motion picture shows. The sponsor of this ordinance, Mrs. Newton, made a mistake when she claimed to be the mother of one hundred thousand children. She meant stepmother, and, like the proverbial stepmother, she is not inclined to give her stepchildren a very fair show. In support of her argument, she has advanced the following reasons:

First.—That pictures are injurious to the eye. That is an assumption, which can only be proved by statistics, based on long years of experiments, which as yet have not been prepared, and none of the leading authorities of America or Europe have so far raised their voices to proclaim moving pictures injurious to sight.

Second.—Poor ventilation. If some of the theaters are poorly ventilated, it can be easily remedied and we have the health department to look after that.

Third.—Children remain in picture shows from seven to ten o'clock in the evening. It is evident that those who make this charge are not very familiar with the business methods of the picture houses. Most of them have very small capacity, averaging 250 and 300 seats. In order to meet expenses, they must fill their house at least twice a night and a system of hold over, or late, checks is adopted which would make it impossible for a patron to remain long over one show, which in most cases does not exceed one hour. Ninety per cent. of these houses are closed by ten o'clock.

Fourth.—Another claim is made that children, after attending motion picture shows in the evening, are not fit for their work the next day. I have been told, on the contrary, that their senses are brightened and made keener by the impressions of the night before, and that they more readily assimilate the tasks before them. For years teachers have been trying to devise a method by which to hold the attention of the children, in order to teach them. Now, that it has been found, is it to be throttled?

Fifth.—Children steal to go to the photoplay houses. Before the advent of these institutions, did children not steal? And what per cent. steal? Suppose one out of a thousand, would you take away one of the greatest educational factors of the twentieth century from twenty thousand children of this city, because twenty of them stole their way into the nickel shows? Churches and schools give entertainments, charging admission. Is it not a fact that some of the children steal even to attend these? Would you condemn school and church entertainments for that reason?

Sixth.—No light. Most houses employ the indirect lighting system, which enables a spectator to read a newspaper comfortably, nullifying the above charge. Where it is found that there is not sufficient light, it is again in the city's power to apply a remedy. If you do not allow the children to go to picture shows, where will they go? Into the streets? Are they safer there? Are they as safe in the parks?

Seventh.—The morals. In every barrel of apples you will find a few rotten ones and the best care of the picker and packer cannot prevent it. Can it be shown that since the advent of the nickel shows the morals of the young are worse? No; decidedly no. Crime and criminals are no more bred in the picture show, or in the families of the poor, than they are bred in the families of the wealthy, in their own homes. The children who watch a picture show learn to distinguish between right and wrong, observe the punishment of the wrong-doer, learn to dislike cowardice and to abhor the villain. The picture show teaches a lesson that appeals more eloquently to the child than any sermon preached. It is a fairy-tale which the child drinks with its eyes. Why, if pictures have any bad influence on the children, should they be allowed in picture shows with, or without, grown persons?

Prof. Starr, of the University of Chicago, says the moving picture show is the highest type of entertainment in the world. Mark Twain said that the picture show makes one feel brighter, healthier and happier; and His Eminence

Pope Pius the 10th, in a late article, commends moving pictures.

This amended ordinance would mean class legislation. The few children of the rich could go to the picture shows at all times, no matter how bad they were, because there is always an attendant at hand; but the children of the poor—and that's where they are plentiful—could not enter into those cherished doors, because father is too tired after his day's work, and mother, after washing dishes, must drudge at the wash-tub. Where else can the children of the poor come in contact with the refinement that is shown them in pictures? Certainly not in their own homes.

The men and women whom I have the honor to represent want pictures to be absolutely free from degrading features, and, with the aid of the strictest censor bureau in the United States, they are made so, here in Chicago. We want to teach proper sentiments to inculcate respect for old age; to take the children to all four corners of the globe and show them the wonders of the world, and to give them ocular demonstrations of the latest achievements in the field of science, commerce and art; but we do not, and hope you do not, want them to grow up as mollycoddles and hyprocrites, by depriving them of such innocent pastime as is afforded by the picture show.

But, no matter what the subject of the picture may be, we always uphold the law. We teach the ten commandments every day in our pictures. The forger, the thief, the wrongdoer is always reached by the long arm of the law. He never gets away; never fails to be punished, and we can proudly say that the banner, standard and escutcheon of every picture brings out in bold letters the words—"you must obey the law."

At the close of the time allotted the speakers, one of the members of the executive committee moved that the vote on the question be postponed until Tuesday, March 19. This motion, however, was overborne by other members, who moved for an immediate vote. Several aldermen gave reasons for opposing the amendment, and when the last vote was announced, the Council Chamber rang with cheers, for the amendment was defeated by a unanimous vote.

A Globe-Trotting Camera man.

Dr. E. B. McDowell, globe trotter and moving picture enthusiast, who has been touring in New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania and Tahiti for several months past, is now on his way to Manila. While in the Antipodes, Dr. McDowell took several thousand feet of negatives, which include a number of valuable and interesting educational subjects. Out-of-the-way spots never before touched by a camera man have been visited by him, and the pictures taken promise to be gems of their kind.

Quite a number of Dr. McDowell's negatives, received in Chicago some time ago, were recently viewed in private by several experts, who speak of them as possessing high quality and novelty.

While in the Philippines, Dr. McDowell will make extensive explorations, during which he will make use of his camera whenever the right opportunity offers. He will next visit Japan, where he will remain for several months.

He is considered one of the best posted men in the renting and exhibiting business in the country.

FLORENCE TURNER GETS OVATION IN PORTLAND.

By special arrangement with the Vitagraph Company the People's Amusement Company, of Portland, Ore., were enabled to present Miss Florence Turner, the Vitagraph Girl, to their patrons at the People's Theater in that city on March 16. At every performance the house was crowded to the doors and hundreds were turned away. Miss Turner gave seveal monologues and was applauded to the echo. Miss Turner was tendered a banquet by local society people after the entertainment.

ANOTHER COPYRIGHT AMENDMENT.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

In addition to the Townsend amendment to the Copyright Act, to which reference has been made and which seeks to limit the liability of manufacturers of photoplays to the sum of $100 for innocent infringement of copyright matter, there was introduced into the House of Representatives on March 4 a bill framed by Judge Reuben O. Moon, of Pennsylvania, who in the hearing on the Townsend bill announced himself as the representative of the Lubin Manufacturing Company.

Stripped of its legal verbiage the bill provides for the acceptance and entry by the Register of Copyright of the Library of Congress scenarios for photoplays and the motion picture itself. Under the present law no provision is made for the photoplay scenario and the entire reel has to be registered in the case of a motion picture of any sort. The new law specifically provides entry for the photoplay scenario and for the registration of the scenario and one photograph from each scene of a produced photoplay or of the title or two scenes from a motion picture other than a photoplay, except in the case of the motion picture produced and offered for sale, when two copies must be deposited as explained in these columns in the issue dated March 16. In other words the companies which merely lease and do not sell their product may enter as an unproduced photoplay or motion picture all of their product, providing in the first instance a scenario and one frame from each scene or, in the second, the title and two frames from an industrial, educational or other product. The companies which sell their product outright must deposit two copies, which may be returned or held at the pleasure and in the judgment of the Librarian of Congress, who is empowered to return to the claimant any matter not required by the library.

The more important feature of the bill is that providing for registration of "dramatic, dramatico-musical composition or motion picture photoplavs" under class (d), which at present provides for the first two classifications only, but the entire legislation is of importance to the motion picture interest as being the first legal recognition of the photoplay as a distinct product. The Copyright Office under the careful and intelligent administration of the present register, Thorvald Solberg, has extended to the motion picture interests every possible courtesy and recognition, but the Moon bill incorporates into the act this clearly defined class.

It is the opinion of this writer that lines 7 to 11 of page three defeat the object of the bill, since a broad ruling might declare that photoplays exhibited for an admission fee constituted publication and necessitated the deposit of two complete copies, but this does not affect the registration of scenarios.

The bill carries no provisions that will rouse opposition such as is found in the objection of the dramatic authors in the Townsend bill.

IT WAS FILMED 'MIDST ORANGES.

The Thanhouser Florida producer set up his camera in an orange grove the other day and took some peachy pictures that he called "The Girl of the Grove," released Friday, April 5. That is, he took pictures when his company wasn't busy eating oranges. It was a great temptation for the company and they just couldn't resist it. They had the liberty of the grove and they simply floundered in oranges. Finally, seven hundred pieces of yellow peel were swept away and work on the picture commenced. It was a dramatic picture, too, and the bunch were not feeling at all dramatic, only orangy. They couldn't be serious after all those oranges.

Finally, were corraled some of the "leads" who hadn't engaged in the orange fest. There was Flo La Badie, Marguerite Snow and Joe Graybill. Graybill's fingers, under examination, showed yellow as if from orange stains, but he said it was cigarettes. Some of the others who had good alibis were allowed to work. The picture came through a success.

MORE ALKALI IKE PICTURES.

Coming! Two great "Alkali" Ike comedies in April from the Essanay Western Company. "Alkali" Ike's Boarding House is positively the greatest laugh-producer ever made, and the other, "Alkali" Ike's Bride is a companion film strung with roars of mirth from first to last. Has everybody here seen "Alkali"? No? Then get right into the procession of wise showmen and book these big features right up. They're winners!

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

I WAS journeying from the outskirts of the city a few day ago when a newspaper friend of mine brought up the subject of moving pictures.

"Why is it that so many managers are giving up straight vaudeville and going into the picture line?" he asked. I told him there were scores of reasons.

"But," he continued, "there is a particular reason. It is a financial one. As I must get off at the next station, I will spring what I am driving at. All managers are naturally looking for whatever will fill their houses, and the newcomers are turning to pictures because they fil'm right off the reel."

"Umpty umpt street!" shouted the subway guard, and the culprit alighted.

Regardless of the opinions that may be entertained as to the ability of my friend as a punster, he must be credited with having voiced, even though unconsciously, a well established fact. The pictures are certainly "filling 'em." At no time in the history of the "movies" in this country has the outlook been brighter from a pecuniary point of view than at the present time. I realize that some exhibitors will smile when they read this statement and ask to be shown a picture of the golden future, but what they may think or say will not cause me to modify the declaration.

In taking a glance at the future of the picture business, the best direction in which to turn our attention is that in which we find the big investors—the men who are putting big money into picture houses and seeking sites for them. For instance, take that indomitable little plunger who has the city so profusely placarded with his name that he is pushing the "57 varieties" hard for first place. I refer to Marcus Loew. With a host of others I give him credit for having admirable judgment in the placing of his coin and the faith he is putting in the pictures is enough to satisfy one that the strides of the "canned" drama and comedy are getting longer and stronger each day. Mr. Loew now has twelve houses in operation in Greater New York alone. On the 25th inst. he takes hold of the old Herald Square Theater and will open it as a picture house—pictures exclusively, as he is now running his Circle Theater. Yes, it is true that he runs vaudeville, but when he gets the Herald Square open he will have two houses in New York and one in Brooklyn running pictures exclusively, and that is saying something for the pictures. In addition to this Mr. Loew has his eye on at least two sites in Manhattan upon which he intends to erect picture houses.

Perhaps these references may not be sufficient to sustain my declaration that motion pictures have to-day a stronger hold upon the amusement seeking public than ever before, so I will go into the field of the traveling exhibitor. Take the Lyman H. Howe shows. I had the pleasure of meeting one of his chief assistants the other day and he stated that the current year has been the best for one-night picture stands in the history of the business, and he made a similar statement with respect to stands where traveling companies remain from one to six weeks or more. The outlook appears so good to Mr. Howe he has about concluded to take the Broadway Theater in about a month. He will run pictures alone. That is, he will have no vaudeville or orchestra. A piano and two or three people behind the screen to talk and provide effects for the pictures will constitute the only additions.

Then, again, take the Kinemacolor pictures. They have been running in three different theaters in Manhattan. One theater has been vacated for larger quarters and the Garden Theater taken. On the site of the building vacated is to be erected a larger theater, especially designed for motion picture exhibitions. All these active movements certainly mean something.

I was about to cite the state rights movement in support of my argument, but to do so at this time would be a little premature. This branch of the business has not been sufficiently tried to my personal satisfaction, although I see no reason why some of the ventures should not attain success, even excelling that which the regular traveling managers claim they have achieved. Some great drawing cards have been put out and I believe they will convert to the picture theaters many people who still entertain a passive feeling towards the voiceless plays.

* * *

The state rights business, in my humble opinion, should be a success, but I fear that if more precaution is not taken there will be a pronounced shrinking in popularity and box office receipts. None contemplating a continuance of business along the state rights line can afford to overlook this precaution, whether he be producer, agent, or licensee. Every organization that goes out should have a capable manager and staff to handle the pictures, and the outfit should be a first-class one. The pictures must be given first-class production. If they are not—well, everybody having knowledge of the business knows what will follow.

The companies that award state rights and intend to launch other productions on a similar basis will seriously injure their own interests if they do not see that the parties have something beside money when applying for a territory. The public is not particularly interested in the amount of money a producer has put in a picture, or the cost of a state right. It wants the real goods, and wants them put on the screen as they should be. I fear, in their eagerness to get quick and big returns, they have not given sufficient consideration to the future of the business and have acceded rights to some people who may kill the confidence of the public. We all know that some people who go upon the road feel that payment of royalty is their chief obligation. I am informed that some who have acquired rights are conducting the exhibitions on an expense basis that threatens the artistic success of the business. "Cheap everything," said my informant. Perhaps these reports originate from parties who may be disappointed in not securing rights. However that may be, the suggestions the reports have brought out are not out of place and it is proper to admonish companies giving such rights to remember what Davy Crockett used to say: "Be sure you're right, then go ahead."

I wonder what has become of that ordinance permitting an increase in the seating capacity of picture houses in Greater New York? I was told the other day that a majority of the Board of Aldermen favor the ordinance that was to have been submitted to them in the early part of February, but they cannot get it before them for action. It is also stated that Mayor Gaynor is satisfied with the proposed measure. It is suspected that some of the big exhibitors have succeeded in "deferring" it. There are a number of exhibitors who would like to have the measure finally acted upon in some manner. If it prevails they will take advantage of the summer season to make alterations that will entitle them to the benefits of the ordinance.

Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, is on the job again. He says moving pictures are not effectively censored; that the shows have pictures which tend to corrupt the morals of youth; that the shows are many times recruiting stations for disreputable resorts, and in accordance with the statement of an agent of the Children's Society, more than twenty-one men connected with moving picture shows have been arrested charged with assaulting girls within the last six months. Canon Chase says that if Mayor Gaynor refuses to close picture places that give forbidden and Sunday performances the matter will be carried to the Grand Jury and District Attorney. Every exhibitor will hope that Canon Chase and his committee will not give Mayor Gaynor too much time to consider the matter. A short cut to a Grand Jury should be welcomed, so that the parties who periodically make such serious charges as those embraced in Canon Chase's resolution, can be forced to either make good, or desist. There should be something done to place the guilt where it belongs, and not leave respectable places under a cloud of suspicion that such blanket charges create. At the same time the Grand Jury should take up the charges recently referred to by the New York Journal that 'overtures for graft have been made by agents of the Children's Society. A good house cleaning might clear the atmosphere and curtail some of the newspaper reports and interviews that have periodically so seriously reflected upon reputable and respectable houses because of their general character. It is time to demand specific charges and insist upon their verification.

MIRROR SCREEN INVENTOR OPENS THEATER.

Mr. F. J. Rembusch, Proprietor of a Fine New Show House in Shelbyville, Ind.

"It's a poor doctor who won't take his own medicine." Mr. F. J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., is a very well-known man in the film trade. For a couple of years now he has been manufacturing and selling the Mirror screen to moving picture theaters everywhere. He has finally sold a Mirror screen to himself and is thereby eliminated from the ranks of doctors who do not care to take their own dope. If there were any doubts about the faith and confidence of Mr. Rembusch in his own product, this theater-building episode should close the controversy for all time. That the Mirror screen is a reliable article, the New Alhambra Theater at Shelbvville stands as evidence. For "The Theater Beautiful," as they call it there, was built on the profits accruing from the sale of the Mirror screen, which is manufactured in Shelbyville. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and now Mr. Rembusch is going to have some of his own pudding. Rather late, to be sure; but he has been so busy waiting on the others that he had not had a chance to sit down and have a taste of it himself.

Mr. F. J. Rembusch.

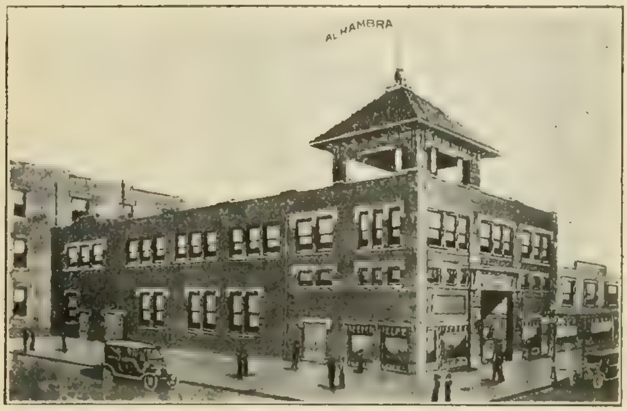
Mr. Rembusch is a pretty big fish in Shelbyville. Being the owner of the Mirror screen factory gives him a substantial position as one of the leading manufacturers of that city. Now he comes along and builds a beautiful theater building, and his prestige is greatly expanded thereby. But Mr. Rembusch is not isolated in Shelbyville; he is very well known in many larger cities. When he comes to New York he seems to be perfectly at home and has long since passed the stage of having to be introduced. He is welcomed in New York wherever he goes; first, because he stands for a well-known legitimate article of the trade, and secondly, because of his engaging personality.

We are printing his portrait herewith and also a view of the new theater. The cut of the house does not do it more than fifty per cent. justice, because the color scheme is very beautifully worked out in Oriental brick, which is of so many colors and of such intricate design that one citizen of the town suggested that the theater might well be called "The Persian Rug" on account of its similarity to that article. The style of architecture, as will be seen, is a combination of several styles, but inclines more towards the bungalow style of architecture, which is distinctly American.

The interior decoration of the theater follows somewhat the usual custom of theaters. Shades in the mural paintings are tan and green, and the outline allegoric. The center figure, main panels, contains the Grecian comedy and tragedy ugly faces. This decorative work was contracted by Mr. Ramsing, a young Danish artist, who has studied in some of the principal art centers, especially in Rome, and is certainly a great credit to his art.

The building will seat about six hundred, with standing room for about two hundred more. It is thoroughly fireproof in every way. The electric wiring is put in under the latest underwriter's rules and it is the best wired building in Shelbyville.

All the exits of the building are provided with patented door hinges and locks—"Von Duponts" patents. These special fixtures are so arranged that there is a bar extending across each door, and a slight pressure of anyone, even a child, against this bar will unlock it from the inside. They are the same locks that are used on the Murat Theater at Indianapolis, and the Alhambra will be one of the few theaters in the State with this arrangement.



Alhambra Theater, Shelbyville, Ind.

The chairs are full mahogany, leather upholstered, and of specially beautiful design and very comfortable. They are the finest chairs made by the Wisconsin Lumber & Veneer Company, of Port Washington, Wis.

The stage is large enough for regular moving picture exhibitions, concerts, vaudeville and light stock companies.

The floor is inclined so that every seat in the theater is excellent. Perfect ventilation is secured by natural and artificial means. The mezzanine floor will be provided with a special parlor for ladies, and with every comfort possible. It is designed for theater parties and for those who desire reserved seats.

THE THANHOUSER MUSEUM.

Well, who'd a' thunk it? The above collection of freaks arn't freaks at all—merely Thanhouser players "doing" freaks. They're simply made up so bully they fool you fine. Looking from left to right you find Bertha Blanchard as the Albino; David Thompson, the Strong Man; Carl Le Viness, the Barker; May Carr, the Fat Lady; Mignon Anderson, the Snake Charmer; Fanny Gregory, the Bearded Lady; Robert Milash, the Giant, and the Thanhouser Kid, the Midget. The picture is "The Star of the Side Show," issued Tuesday, April 2.

Two Vitagraph Headliners

One Fine Patriotic Picture and a Superb Religious Subject Stand Out Above the Field.

RALPH INCE bids fair to go down in the annals of picturedom as the great Lincoln. Since his first impersonation of the great emancipator, Mr. Ince has given that character much study, until by this time the attitudes, gestures and expressions of the martyr President are second nature to him. The portrayal of Lincoln by Mr. Ince in "The Seventh Son" is its greatest charm, although the characterization of Henry M. Stanton, Lincoln's Secretary of War, by Mr. Tefft Johnson, is surprisingly well done, but will not be appreciated as well as the work of Mr. Ince, for Mr. Stanton does not occupy quite the place that Mr. Lincoln does in the hearts of all Americans. However, they are both great characterizations, and any one who does them better will be doing something indeed.

"The Seventh Son" was written by Mr. Hal Reid and is based on a letter of condolence that was written by President Lincoln to a widow who had given the lives of her six sons to the nation. Mrs. Mary Maurice in the part of the widow gives just the right character. In the opening scenes she is happy among her seven stalwart sons who are light-hearted and good-natured and play many pranks upon each other. All of this comes to an end, however, when war breaks out and the three eldest sons enlist and march away with the army.

Scene from "The Seventh Son" (Vitagraph).

The sad news of their death is afterwards brought to the mother, and it is a crushing blow. Undaunted by their brothers' fate, two of the other boys enlist and in a very realistic skirmish, which is shown in the picture, they, too, lay down their lives, and again the widowed mother's head is bowed in anguish. Still the sixth, when he comes of age, casts his fortunes at the front, and there, too, he, like his brothers, dampens the soil with his blood and yields his life for the salvation of his country.

The poor widow is left at last with her only remaining son. This son, the youngest, had never been considered strong minded. He was timid and retiring, but nevertheless when he arrived at age he, like his brothers, started off to the front. In a skirmish the poor fellow becomes bewildered, and in his excitement runs away, thereby becoming a deserter, although not fully realizing that he is such. He is court-martialed and sentenced to die. The news gets to his lonely mother. Having given six of her sons for the Union cause, she believes she has a right to ask that the life of the seventh be spared to her. Clad in humble shawl and kerchief, she arrives at the President's mansion in Washington, as a humble supplicant for the life of her son. She is ushered into the presence of Lincoln and presents her case. Secretary Stanton argues against the granting of promiscuous pardons on account of the bad example set thereby. The President is constrained to close his heart to her, although his inward feelings are seen to be quite plainly in favor of the widow. The widow departs leaving a photograph with the President, which is picked up and looked at by him. With a weary gesture he calls her back, for the photograph has touched a spot in his heart which every one so well knows to have existed. The picture shows the widow at the graves of her six sons, each having at its head a small American flag. A sight like this is too much for Abraham Lincoln and he grants the pardon regardless of Secretary Stanton or anyone else.

Thus the picture closes, and a mighty fine picture it is. It will be a great feature for any national holiday, and no amount of advertising that an exhibitor may do will prove to be overdone, in view of the satisfaction with which we know any audience will receive the picture. A real holiday feature, and we take pleasure in recommending it as such.

"THE ILLUMINATION" (Vitagraph).

There has long existed what may be termed an unwritten law among producers which forbids them to use the personality of Christ. There are good reasons for this, and the matter seems to be fairly well understood by theatrical men. However, there have been numerous plays in which the Nazarene is present in spirit, notably the play of "Ben Hur," in which the spectator is expected to imagine that the Saviour is just within the doorway of the temple. Of like nature is this latest Vitagraph religious production which is entitled "The Illumination." It is a picture of suggestion, in which the principal character is not seen, but always just outside the scope of the camera. In this manner, throughout its course, the picture is entirely inferential. We see the Redeemer, and we do not.

The idea of "The Illumination" is to depict the great personal magnetism of the Saviour and how it was the means of gathering about him converts from the various walks of life. It is to show how in moments of greatest bitterness toward him, certain of his enemies were suddenly transformed into sincere followers of himself and His word.

The theme in the present instance deals with a young Jew, Joseph by name, who became converted one day during those troublesome times by witnessing the restoration of a blind man's sight. He had previously been betrothed to a Jewish maiden, Ruth, but after his conversion, ties of family and bonds of love were disregarded by the strength of his conviction. Joseph's new allegiance was considered a calamity by his father and mother, as well as by Ruth, his promised bride.

Maximus was a cruel Roman centurion who believed no more in Jesus than did Sabina, his sweetheart. Maximus regretted to see Joseph join the procession of converts and sent Sabina to win him away from his new found faith with her most seductive smiles and manners. But Joseph had seen a great light and the light was reflected in his eyes, wherefore all the blandishments of Sabina were in vain. We then see Joseph on the edge of a procession of converts following the Christ, whom we do not see, but imagine to be at the head of the procession. While these are passing, Sabina and Maximus and other scoffers are jeering and throwing stones. Sabina's arm, as she is about to cast a stone, becomes momentarily paralyzed and she stands transfixed. In another moment she is on her way by the side of Joseph in the procession of worshippers while Maximus and the others are dumbfounded.

Joseph and Sabina become companions in their new found joy, greatly to the chagrin of Ruth and Maximus, who conspire to put to death their seemingly faithless loved ones. Meanwhile the father and mother of Joseph have themselves become converted to the Nazarene. Sabina and all the others follow the cross to Calvary where the crucifixion is shown by suggestion. After the crucifixion the wrath of the gods descends upon the pagans and their temples are destroyed by earthquakes, making a very impressive scene; one of the most realistic bits of work that has been done by the Vitagraph Company for a long time, and entirely convincing. The ponderous stones fall exactly as ponderous stones ought to fall, the dry mortar rising in clouds of dust. Joseph, Sabina and others follow the two Marys to the tomb of the Saviour, where they lament and pray. It is here that Maximus and Ruth follow in their desire for vengeance, but as they stand with murderous knives poised ready to dispatch their beloved friends, they, too, stand transfixed by an unseen power and are quickly numbered among the mourners that do homage at the tomb.

This picture deserves praise for its method of handling. It breathes the atmosphere of Bible times and is carried on with an understanding of those times that is adequate and faithful. The work of Mr. Tom Powers as Joseph is idealistic and sincere. The part of Ruth, played by Miss Rosemary Theby, has a touch of orientalism about it that gives promise of great work along this line by her in the future. The part of Maximus is played by Mr. Harry Northrup and he gives us an ideal portrayal of the Roman soldier. Miss Helen Gardner as Sabina gives a strong and finished rendition of a woman converted from more or less of a libertine into a penitent believer. The light effects are mostly from one side or the other and give the scenes a strong contrast of light and shade, and add to the supernatural atmosphere of the piece. It is a picture that can be featured either at a theater or at a church. H. F. H.

SALES COMPANY ANIMATED WEEKLY.

One of the features of the next Animated Weekly to be released by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company will be a panoramic view of the recent wreck of the 20th Century Limited train.

A first print of the wreck was shown to a representative of The World in the offices of the Republic Film Company, which made the photographs. The pictures of the wreck are very interesting. The cameraman displayed good judgment in placing his camera, and as a result pictured the entire disaster, showing the defective rail which caused the damage and, which was thrown about 50 feet away, the overturned and burned coaches resting on the ice covered banks of the Hudson River. The wrecking engine at work clearing away the debris is particularly interesting.

CENTURY COMPANY'S NEW SONG SLIDE.

Song slides with the verses and chorus are announced as the latest thing in slides by the Century Slide Company, of East St. Louis, Mo. Each verse and chorus are on a different slide and are printed in plain letters, so that they can be easily read. These slides will be put out on a rental basis and the rates will be reasonable. This looks like a good idea and worth a trial.

NEW YORKERS LEASE TRENTON HOUSE.

After being entirely redecorated and renovated, the Broad Street Theater, Trenton, N. J., passes into the hands of three well-known New York theatrical men, Monday, April 8th, for a long term of years. E. L. Perry, formerly of the Shubert Theatrical Company, William H. Currie, of Broadhurst & Currie, the producing firm, and Frank Brassell, till lately a Wall Street broker, are the lessees.

The policy of the theater will be first-class photoplays and five acts of vaudeville, changing every Monday and Thursday. As the seating capacity is 1,600, ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents prices will be charged. A ladies' concert orchestra of ten pieces will be one of the features, as well as a costly pipe organ to accompany certain photoplays and illustrated songs.

The company will be known as the Broad Street Theater Company and a chain of houses throughout New Jersey and Pennsylvania is planned for the near future. Ladies' writing rooms, female ushers, an art gallery and children's play rooms are but a few of the innovations which the Trenton theater-goers will be offered and the management will be most liberal in its novel ideas. The theater has been built but a few months and is the largest and most up-to-date in modern appliances in the city.

A NEW POWERS DIRECTOR.

The Powers Motion Picture Company announce the engagement of H. W. Matthews as an addition to their already augmented staff of directors. Mr. Matthews, who was formerly a director for the Edison Company, will work in conjunction with Director Albert McGovern and Giles R. Warren, scenario editor, both late of the Lubin Company. Mr. Matthews will no doubt prove a valuable acquisition to the company, the high quality of whose films has already caused much favorable comment in the motion picture field.

Scenes from a Two-Reel Solax Feature, "The Sewer."

"THE SEWER" (Solax).

For four weeks the scenic artist and the Solax property men worked on the light and mechanical effects for this two-reel feature release of Wednesday, April 24th. As a result of this long studied and careful preparation, the Solax Company is able to say to the exchanges and exhibitors, that it now has one of the most vivid and most remarkable melodramas produced in pictures. Every foot of the film brings a new thrill. In the long weeks of preparation, real sewers, manholes, rats, traps, switches, pulleys, divers and dens, mannikins and other contraptions used in the underworld, were gotten together with utmost care and attention to detail.

The story of the sewer was written by Henri Menessier, of Beaux Arts. M. Menessier is at present at the head of the Solax art department. He spent considerable time at the head of a gang of workmen and directed them in the building of a big ditch in the Solax grounds in Flushing. This ditch was eventually filled with water and real sewerage waste. He contrived an ingenious roof and wall for this sewer which shut out considerable light and yet was light enough for photographic purposes. The sewer rats which attack the hero were a week in taming and training. White rats were used, as it was found that the ordinary gray rats were not amenable to reason. They would scamper as soon as they were let loose. In order that the white rats would look like grey sewer rats, it was necessary to paint them red, so that they would photograph black.

The studio door was sawed up and a trap-door was built. A big hole was dug under the trap, so that the hero, who is lowered down by rope and pulley, would give the effect of being swallowed by the earth. In fact, all the effects aimed for, registered with exactitude on the film.

SELIG LEADING WOMAN INJURED SECOND TIME.

Miss Eugenie Besserer, of the Selig Western stock company, who not so very long ago suffered for several weeks from a broken leg, the result of a strenuous attempt to secure a certain effect in a marine production, is on the hospital list again, this time with a wrenched ankle, and, strange to say, the wrenched ankle was caused by a second attempt at the "effect" which resulted in breaking her leg. Hobart Bosworth, the Selig producer, had warned her each time not to attempt the effect in question, but in Miss Besserer's French blood runs the determination and ambition of her race and so she paid little heed to the advices of the producer. After the Selig studio's physician had pronounced the second injury only a badly wrenched ankle, Miss Besserer made the statement that she would again attempt the desired effect as soon as her ankle would permit. Such is the temperament of the picture actress. In their quest for realism they oftentimes allow their ambitions to overshadow the director's good judgment.

MR. A. L. COTTRILL, SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. A. L. Cottrill, of Point Pleasant, W. Va., writes requesting us to correct a misstatement in the report of the election of officers of the West Virginia Exhibitors' League. Our report had it that Mr. Washburn, of Salem, had been elected to the office of second vice-president, whereas Mr. Cottrill claims that distinction. We stand corrected.

"TEMPTED BUT TRUE" (Imp).

There are some stories which though they may appear trite to the blasé student of fiction and drama, may, nevertheless, have a moral, which always pays on repetition. There is not anything particularly new about the story of "Tempted But True." Still when we reflect on the words of a recent preacher, that a girl's life on Broadway is not always or even frequently "silk stockings and champagne," a film which drives home this point is bound to have a certain preventive value wherever shown.

Any infraction of morality brings its own punishment. This is the thing that is dinned into our ears from the pulpit and demonstrated to us in good books, good pictures, etc., every day of our lives.

The young girl in this picture tired of her humdrum village life and so she went to a big city and secured a position. The freedom of boarding house life at first attracted her. It was a change and it was a relief from the irksome monotony of her home town life. Of course, she had adventures and she became the near victim in a bogus marriage.

Scene from "Tempted But True" (Imp).

But in her home town she had left behind a faithful heart. He was a rugged fellow and a blacksmith, and when the girl's silence had almost driven her parents to distraction, he made for the great city in search of his sweetheart. He found her only to be spurned, but he persevered in his quest. He routed a gang of conspirators who were inveigling the girl into a false marriage, and was successful in persuading her to go home.

They meet at the depot and return together. The girl had surely been sorely tempted, but she remained true, and thus a happy marriage loomed in the near future for the honest blacksmith and his sweetheart.

Vivian Prescott plays the part of the tempted girl and King Baggot is the honest blacksmith who unraveled the wicked plots of the city chaps. March 28 is the release date.

"The Clemency of Isabeau"

Tale by Louis Reeves Harrison, Based on a Classic Pathe Drama.

WHILE the human inheritance of combativeness went largely to the males of her line, Isabeau of Pierrefond was not without a strain of ferocity in her nature akin to that shown by a tigress, whose blazing, yellow eyes of hate easily soften to strange tenderness when they are turned upon the young of her kind, but the great lady was of nobler soul than most of those who turn the light unspeakable of affection upon the fruit of their wombs. She had idealized those who had guided her steps from the bud of infancy to the sweet-scented blossom of maidenhood, she had responded in full to the flare of passion with which her husband had set the fixed star of her natural love aflame, and a shower of gold had fallen upon her children from the exhaustless fountain of her maternal love. Then as Death took one after another of her family into the despairing mirage of human hopes, leaving an only son, Gennaro, to center her attention, she revealed what was at one and the same time a source of weakness as well as of strength. Isabeau, Princess d'Heristal, loved her boy too well—the mere sight of him called up visions of past happiness to her yearning eyes—yet loving through him the Holy Child who had risen to be the world's master, only to die in torture before his mother's eyes, she learned to love all humanity.

It was not altogether to Gennaro's advantage that he had such a mother. He had her noble mould, and she saw that he was trained in the use of arms, men exploiting themselves then in war as now in business, politics and society, for he was a spoiled child. He knew that it was for his sake that the beautiful and illustrious widow had refused the offers of numerous admirers and, if the truth be told, had retired from Paris to Pierrefond because the King himself had been among those ready to yield her devotion, much to the righteous indignation of his less lovely and still less brilliant consort. Isabeau was a self-exiled star, before whom the Peris of court Paradise had slunk abashed—she had left all that would have satisfied other ladies of high rank to be a splendid mother to her son. He knew that her watchful eyes were blind to his faults; she only saw what was finest of herself in him, and he strove not to deserve her faith. He brawled with other gentlemen, even with men in his service, and not a pretty wench for miles around dared look at him twice, for he was not above the conquest of a scullion, to say nothing of reveling in the romance of inciting restless wives of absent husbands to secret amours.

Isabeau urged more than one desirable match upon her only child, but he was shy of the yoke, declaring with some justice that, aside from herself, the most beautiful women in the world were those he had yet to meet. Gennaro was very much of a man in that his warmth of sentiment was only a dull glow which needed the breath of fresh lips to fan it to passion's flame. Marriage meant the hard labor of according his polygamous tendencies to monogamous convention. He was a man of his own times (though the type is marvelously persistent), when display of wealth and social distinction was quite as alluring to women as tests of strength and skill at arms, but his mother could only see that he was too young to grasp the meaning of family in evolution.

She often grew sad at heart, did Isabeau, when even her blinding love failed to cover her son's roseate flirtations. Then she would dismiss him from her presence, her small court as well, and throw aside the curtains at one end of her withdrawing room and kneel at a shrine there closeted to pour out her soul in gratitude and submission to the Power Invisible. This devotion was not needed to the ordering of her own life, in which religion had been a consistent factor. She required no other objective anchorage than her own purity, but she prayed to the image of Him who died that divinity might be humanly apprehended to enlarge her view of what had been inscribed in golden letters below the crucifix.

"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

The fact that Isabeau had known from infancy that she was favored with beauty, wealth and social distinction, far from warping her soul, had left her mind free to expand until it had become plain to her that the individual, created and supported by others, was only important as one of countless means to a single end—the enrichment of common welfare. The issue to be faced was not merely the development of her own personality, but the enlightenment and consequent betterment of all within her sphere of influence. She lost nothing in these moments of self-abnegation, on the contrary she universalized her heart and prepared herself for the crucial test of her character which was bound to come.

Gennaro was bound to encounter competition in his gay pursuit of "visions," with all the dangers to be expected from entering forbidden preserves, and he soon clashed with a rival gentleman known as Signor Coppeline, who thought himself well established in the favor of a capricious damosel from Provence, one of those faithless women who are as subtle as the poison of the grape, "sure of every art needed to trap a lover's heart." Coppeline objected after the fashion of the Moyen Age. He had caught Gennaro in the act of descending from the window of the faithless one and hot words followed—Cupid is a warm individual, able to do without clothes—and they instantly repaired to a near-by wood to fight it out like gentlemen, that title having an indefinite meaning in the days of old. There were no carriages and no cameras, but an accidental witness, one of the retainers of Pierrefond, came upon the rivals when they were enjoying sword play in dead earnest and saw that his young master was handling his blade with a skill that did credit to his training. In the wrong and therefore on the defensive, Gennaro parried every thrust and lunge at his adversary's command, his maternal inheritance of courage standing him in good stead when it was needed, for Coppeline grew the more infuriated as he failed to draw blood.

The crisp rasp of steel cut the air as one pressed and the other yielded in a combat of deadly hatred on one side and easy self-confidence on the other, the retainer watching from concealment until chance or some other lawless agency intervened. Gennaro slipped and nearly lost his footing, and even as he did so his sword flew out of his hand; Coppeline closed in on his defenceless opponent and buried his blade in a vital spot. When he withdrew the blood-stained steel Gennaro, only child and last male of his line, fell gasping his last, a great life stream surging up from his throat. The spoiled darling of fortune and the object of a mother's devotion was a corpse, of less utility than the blades of grass he crushed in falling.

Coppeline stood gazing at his victim for a moment in dazed triumph, unaware of his identity. He had obeyed a primitive instinct in killing his rival without consideration for the unpitying consequences of taking a human life of importance, and it was plain that the richly-dressed lover of the damosel from Provence was a young man of consequence. The murderer was roused by distant cries—the retainer who had witnessed the deed had informed the principal officer of Pierrefond what had taken place, and the latter was scattering all the force he could summon to apprehend the dastard. Over Coppeline's face stole an expression of fox-like cunning. Self-preservation lay not in flight, but in doubling on those who had set forth to capture. He ran as he was, his dripping sword leaving drops that even a human hound might follow, and he headed for a small gate of Pierrefond left open in times of peace for the use of servants. Circumstances favored his entrance—the Seneschal had so stripped the chateau of guards that none was at the postern—but those searching had found the trail and were hot in pursuit.

"Sanctuary!" Coppeline gasped when within the walls. There was none to grant it and conscience drove him through the lower corridors. Up long stairs to the suite of Princess d'Heristal he mounted and entered abruptly. Hers alone the privilege of affording refuge.

There still prevailed an ancient right in France of inviolable hospitality which regarded as sacred the person of one entertained or seeking shelter, a strange custom descended from the mighty flare of civilization in Greece, when temples, tombs and statues of God gave asylum to criminals. There was always a place where the erring human might find respite from the swift vengeance of primitive society, and French nobles preserved the magnanimous practice.

"We Are Searching for a Murderer," Said the Sceneschal, Pointing to the Bloody Handkerchief.

"Sanctuary!" cried Coppeline as he burst into the withdrawing room of Isabeau while she was at her devotions. "The right of Asile!"

She rose and came to where she could have a good look at the fugitive. She studied him carefully and noted his weapon. "Your sword!" she exclaimed in horror.

He now remembered to clean his blade. He threw aside his kerchief as he fell on his knees before her. "It was a duel," he pleaded. "I fear, gracious Madame, that I fought too well and injured my adversary."

She regarded him with lowering brows, then turned away in disgust. "It is sickening," she said, "this brawling when all is quiet in France."

"I did but defend myself," he begged, "against one who attacked bravely and well, but without cause, mistaking me for some other as I came through yonder forest. God knows, he may be some gentleman of your household—your steward is in pursuit—but I do not come as a common criminal."

"You must be one," Isabeau declared coldly, "otherwise you would not tremble in suing for protection. Why should I give refuge to one who passes my gates in this way?"

"I came by the postern," he explained. "Madame la Princesse is ill-guarded." He regarded her wild-eyed as there were sounds of pursuit from without, then looked about him. Catching sight of the shrine, he dragged there on his knees and bowed his head. "God have mercy on me!" he prayed. "This is my hour!"

Isabeau paled. She walked to where the wretch was kneeling, bade him rise, moved the altar, raised a panel supporting the crucifix and disclosed a closet. "Hide!" she urged. "I will save you for His sake."

It was said, and in good time—there was a knock at the door. Coppeline entered the dark space, and Isabeau closed it as before. She drew the curtain and went to the door where someone knocked.

The Seneschal and his followers were admitted. "Madame la Princesse—" he began.

"Are you making a private communication?" she asked.

"We are searching for a murderer—" he began again.

"Post your guards," she commanded, then as he hesitated, "Are you at my orders, sir?"

His eyes fell, and they rested upon a bloody kerchief that lay upon the floor. The mistress of Pierrefond was acting strangely, but it was not for common servitors to hear much of what passed. The officer raised his eyes for a second of questioning reproach, then dismissed his excited followers and bowed in resignation as he left to obey orders. He could well afford to wait. No one would be allowed to leave the chateau, and Madame would soon know what had befallen her family.

Even as the Seneschal passed from the chamber, Isabeau's dark eyes following him, there came a toll of the chapel bell. She started nervously—the victim was one of her household. She strode menacingly toward the prayer closet, but bethought herself and stood pondering. She threw open the curtains before her shrine, but proceeded no further—there came a knock at the door that accorded in solemnity with the toll of the bell. She gave order of admittance. It was too late to yield the murderer—justice supreme was now in her hands. The monks of chapel now entered, bearing a litter. Without explanation they placed their burden on the floor and uncovered a lifeless body.

Isabeau drew back and clasped her hands to her bosom. "God!" she exclaimed in agony. "It is Gennaro!" She hurried to the side of the bier and kneeled there. "Gennaro!" she called, as if to wake him. "My son! Your mother speaks!" Then, before them all, the noble woman broke down as she had not done in other affliction. She bowed her head over what remained of the creature she had brought into the world and let violent grief burst from her bosom. "My flower," she sobbed, "my only one." It was so pitiful to those who had seen her in strength that they turned away, all save the Seneschal. who had entered with one man.

Back in the dark closet a wretch trembled with fear. His haggard face showed that no ancient custom could bring him peace of mind, that even liberty could not outweigh his mental torture.

Isabeau rose suddenly, perhaps from memory of him she had shielded. "Who has done this?" she asked of the Seneschal.

"Who?" he repeated to his solitary follower.

"It started as a duel," said the one who had witnessed the tragedy, "but it was a foul thrust that killed Gennaro."

The Seneschal pointed with his sword to where he had seen the bloody kerchief. "We traced the murderer—" he began.

Isabeau turned on him savagely. "Are you dispensing

"God! It is Gennaro—My Son, Your Mother Speaks!"

justice?" she asked with bitter significance. "Take place nearhand where you will be within call when needed."

The priests filed out in advance of the big Seneschal. He bowed his satisfaction after a glance at the face of the Princess.

The tigress mother shone in her eyes of volcanic fire. Back curled her lips over teeth gleaming with primitive ferocity. The desire to triumph alone over the slayer of her last-born shook her splendid form with a tempest of hate. Memories that sweep the soul-strings with high emotion had been aroused by the sight of her dead child, him she had given structure in months of patience and life in the agony of travail. He was part of her. For him there had ever been a niche in her heart as holy as the shrine at which she worshipped, and now it was empty. She could devote herself to God, but He was intangible, while the human creature who had shared her adoration had nestled warm at her breast as a child and clung to her in his budding manhood. He was mother's boy.

When all had left the room, and she was alone in her vigil, Isabeau went to her prayer closet and opened the hiding-place. "Come forth!" she commanded as to one under death sentence.

Coppeline staggered out and regarded the Princess with fear-distended eyes. "Mercy!" he begged.

"Look upon your work," she told him when they neared the litter. "There lies all I had on earth to love."

He covered his face with his hands. "I deserve the worst," he moaned miserably.

"Your sword!" she demanded.

He drew with a trembling hand, but yielded it with the sudden access of courage that comes to those whose end is near. A convulsion swept his form, and he fell on his knees before her. "Your leave to pray," he begged. "You may then lay me beside your son."

Isabeau scowled with hate as she took the weapon that had let out her boy's life blood, but her attention was drawn from the murderer to be executed at the side of his victim. The sword in her hand, held hilt upward, presented the conformation of a cross.

"Thy will be done," murmured Coppeline in the Lord's Prayer.

Isabeau stood glaring at his blade like an avenging fury, her condemnation carrying with it all the energy of her soul. But when she involuntarily repeated his words, "Thy will be done," she turned slowly toward her shrine. The darkening of this world by man's cruelty weighed heavily on her in this acute moment—it was ever part of her unspoiled soul to resent wrong—yet He had humbly said to an erring woman "I am no criminal judge, either to sentence or acquit. Go, repent of thy guilt and sin no more." He was glorious in so saying, but she was only human. Coppeline should die.

"Forgive us our trespasses," the murderer prayed, "as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Isabeau started and clasped one hand to her heart. Those words were inscribed in gold where she offered daily assurances of supreme faith. She must think. Before she consigned a soul to the immortal sea that brought it hither, she must not forget that an act criminal may often be the result of mere, blind instinct that leaves no choice between one course and another. The wretch kneeling before her could more justly be excused for acting on impulse than could she who was moved by cold malice. She staggered back as if overcome by the conflict raging within her and dropped the sword. "Rise," she whispered.

Either Coppeline did not hear or had given up hope, for he continued his prayer to the end and opened his arms like one resigned to his doom.

Isabeau took a small key from her bosom and cast it before him. "Go," she commanded in low tones. "I could kill you without qualm, but for what He said in his torture"—she pointed to the crucifix—"Forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Coppeline took the key and staggered to his feet. He acted like one dazed as she indicated a secret door to the left of her shrine, but recovered at parting and tried to expess gratitude.

Isabeau pointed on high. "All men," she said, "are within the bounds of His sympathy."

Coppeline bowed in silence and disappeared.

Isabeau regarded Christ on the cross. "They cannot drift beyond Thy love," she continued, "Noble Son of an Immortal Mother." Tears dimmed her eyes as she turned away. Then she flung herself at the foot of the bier. "Oh, Gennaro," she cried, "My son!"

"The Margrave's Daughter."

(Gaumont, One Reel.)

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN two important features of motography the Gaumonts have for some years past maintained a singularly high standard of efficiency—in the selection and photographing of outdoor scenery and in the accurate and painstaking portrayal of romantic history. In every part of France are favored regions, which abound in picturesque valleys, in hills and rivers and ancient castles embalmed in the legends and traditions of the people. To make the proper happy choice of the best among so much which is good has been the task of the film makers here. The task has been well performed. No traveler who ever passed through the valley of the Rhone or the Loire but wished that he could see the ancient castles peopled as of old and witness something of their daily lives and perhaps some stirring incident in their history. Such wish is amply gratified in "The Margrave's Daughter." The historic plot, if such a name may be used in connection with the subject at all, is of the slenderest and simplest kind and will be understood easily by every child. The story is indeed nothing but a simple framework, upon which has been built a gorgeous and spectacular motion picture.

The "Margrave," for all the title bears on the merits of the picture, might just as well have been an earl or a lord or a seigneur. The dramatic part of the story, while interesting and well-developed, is subordinated to the scenic and spectacular features. From the viewpoint of the exhibitor, who cannot depend upon the learned and the scholars alone, this is no uncommon merit. Even from the higher standpoint of the general good of the industry, the emphasizing of the spectacular part is by no means to be deplored. Something worth knowing is learned by the audience which witnesses such pictures. They catch a glimpse of the spirit of other days, of manners, morals, customs and dresses of bygone generations. Such things every audience learns with delight as well as profit.

Now this in brief is the story of the film: A young knight is in love with the Margrave's daughter and the stern parent frowns on the wooing of the bold swain. Very naturally the paternal frown is set at defiance by the lovers, there is the usual rough sea for the ship of love and then the final union of the lovers.

Out of this none too novel story the Gaumonts have made a cinematographic masterpiece. In all my experience I have never seen so much absolute perfection of detail as is shown in the last four or five scenes of "The Margrave's Daughter." The trial and judgment were most impressive and historically correct, the procession through the halls of the Margrave's castle to the scaffold, the grouping of the people, the scenes about the fatal block, the Margrave and his court in the balcony seemed like a section of medieval splendor and barbarism suddenly but most richly and completely come to life. I thrill with admiration when I think of the time, the skill and the patience, the historic scholarship it has cost to paint this tale in such rare union of color and motion.

Much that is meritorious in this film presses for notice, but the insistent hurry of the passing hour makes a complete appraisal of every good point impossible. One thing, however, I must say before I close. The same skill and wisdom, which selected the scenery and the costumes and all the other minute details, also made choice of the actors in "The Margrave's Daughter." This does not merely mean that the acting was satisfactory; it means a good deal more. I want to say, that every actor in the play, from the stars to the supers, possessed the proper physical attributes to make the most of his part. The heroine is not only a good emotional actress, but a young woman of exceptional beauty, uniting the symmetry of a Phidian statue with all the grace and sweetness of a well-bred Frenchwoman. The same compliment is due to the lover, a handsome well proportioned youth with the head of a fine Greek type. The Margrave had the girth and physical strength we might expect in such a character, the churchly judge, the jailers and executioners all looked every inch just what they were. This surely is no slight merit in a picture and must appeal to every audience. "The Margrave's Daughter" was shown at a private exhibition in the Crystal Theater on 14th Street.

NEW THEATER FOR MISHICOT, WIS.

Earl Stoneman is president, Arthur Holst, secretary and treasurer, and Ray Scheuer, manager, of a company organized at Mishicot, Wis., to establish a moving picture theater for the village. The new company has plans for the erection of a fireproof, modern playhouse, work on which will be started at once. The new house will have elevated floor and will be equipped with every modern convenience and be one of the finest theaters in the county.

"The Man and the Maid" (American)

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

IN "The Man and the Maid," a full reel film to be released by the American April 12, Independent exhibitors are offered another society drama with a pleasant story that is certain to rival the success made by "From the 400 to the Herd."

One is delighted with the beautiful settings, both exterior and interior, which adorn the film, advantage being taken of the picturesque environs and several fine interior views of the Coronado Beach Hotel, in southern California, where most of the incidents transpire. The fine photography, which marks the film throughout, brings out effectively the full beauty of the settings and, moreover, gives a sharp facial definition of the people in the cast. Warren Kerrigan, Misses Pauline Bush, Van Trump and Louise Lester, and George Periolat and Jack Richards are seen in the principal roles, which are well sustained.

A characteristic that will specially recommend "The Man and the Maid" is that, while possessing a distinctly Western flavor, it affords a study of a citv bred family, the members of which are strong aspirants for social distinction and who are unscrupulous in their methods of acquiring the necessary wealth to sustain it. The true democracy of the West is also very pleasingly illustrated in the climax of a pretty little love story.

Jack Stevens, a handsome young ranch owner, grows tired of roaming over his broad acres, and betakes himself to Coronado Beach to forget his lonesomeness. The Getrich family immediately pounce on him as a desirable catch for pretty May Getrich, the only daughter of the household. Her brother Will had discovered that young Stevens was a millionaire, and lost no time in introducing himself and his family.

But mother and daughter overdo their parts. Their continuous encroachment on his time and attentions become a bore to Jack, who seeks the society of Pearl Peach, a winsome little parlor maid, who has seen better days. Haughty Mrs. Getrich and her daughter are piqued and hurt over the slight put upon them by Jack, but he continues to avoid them and to press his suit with Pearl.

Determined to get some of Jack's wealth by hook or crook, the older Getrich and his son now conspire to sell him bogus stock. They are overheard while mapping out their plans by Pearl, who warns Jack against their treachery. During a consultation that shortly followed, Jack denounces both men as swindlers, and renounces their society.

The conspirators are astounded at Jack's knowledge of their intention to defraud him and are at a loss to account for it. Then Will Getrich remembered that Pearl was near them the evening before, while their plans were being discussed, and immediately suspects that she overheard the conversation and had informed Jack. He goes in search of the girl and taxes her with eavesdropping. Pearl acknowledges that she could not help hearing the words that passed between the father and son, and also informs him that she had acquainted Jack Stevens with the plot.

Soon afterwards Pearl is discharged by the hotel manager, and we see her leaving, sad and disconsolate over the loss of her position. Jack Stevens meets her, as she is wiping away the fast-falling tears, and learns the truth.

The closing scene shows Jack and Pearl on horseback, overlooking a wide range on his ranch showing hundreds of cattle driven by cowboys. The far away foothills, receding into a dim skyline, mark one of the boundaries of her new home, which has now lost all its lonesomeness for Jack Stevens.

KINEMACOLOR "DURBAR" IN SOCIETY.

That Kinemacolor has taken its place in the social as well as the theatrical world is evidenced by the fact that during the past few weeks the Durbar, Coronation and other series taken by this wonderful process have by special "command" been shown at the residence of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, 637 Fifth Avenue, on the occasion of a dinner to the German Ambassador and other distinguished guests; at Sherry's, Delmonico's, the Hotel Plaza, the Union League and Crescent Clubs, to say nothing of a score or more of less known organizations conducting charity benefits.

Unique Development of Theater Scheme.

HOW A CENTRAL LOCATION WAS SECURED WHEN THERE WAS APPARENTLY NONE SUCH TO BE FOUND. W. P. READY'S CLEVER MANIPULATION OF THE "PRINCESS," NASHVILLE'S NEW PLAYHOUSE.

THE establishment of the Princess Theater in Nashville marks rather a daring feat in enterprise and its history is one of special interest to men everywhere who follow the workings of other men's brains in developing such achievements. The theater which opened its doors to the public in February was erected at a cost of $75,000 and was built expressly for the purpose of putting on high class vaudeville and the best moving picture shows to be secured in America. Its location is without any doubt the best for such an enterprise in the city, as it catches the crowd in the very heart of the downtown shopping district. Since the opening of the theater this fact has been demonstrated again and again, as packed houses greet every performance both afternoon and night. Of course the excellent shows put on have a great deal to do with drawing the crowds, but the site is also responsible for a large share of the folks who fill every available seat from day to day.

Several years ago W. P. Ready, a former real estate dealer of Nashville, began to turn his attention to moving picture theaters with remarkable success. About two years ago he built a theater and, through his clever manipulation of the advertising and other features of the publicity part of this little moving picture house, he soon made of it a recognized leader in moving picture theaters. But Mr. Ready realized that the small auditorium would not admit of any further growth, and, being extremely progressive, he set about planning for a larger theater.

He soon saw he was up against it in two ways. He could get many large sites suitable for such a theater, but they were off the beaten track of the crowded retail district of the city. To purchase or lease a building in the heart of the city would cost more than such a venture justified. The only alternative left him was to build a theater a little off the general thoroughfare and, with his keen insight into the money-making part of the business, he knew this would be foolhardy. He was about to abandon the plan altogether when one day a sudden idea came to him, which has since proved the foundation for all of his remarkable success.

There is in Nashville a side street running into the heart of the business district. At the corner of the street is an immense stone building used for offices and apartments. The building faces on Church Street and its location at the corner of Fifth Avenue makes it easily the center of the retail trade of the city. In the rear of the building is a row of houses six, to be exact. They are used chiefly as boarding houses and are only suitable for rental purposes. The houses have deep back yards and it is in their united back yards that the beautiful $75,000 Princess Theater has been erected.

The plan pursued by Mr. Ready was this: he leased the six houses from the owner for a period of twenty years, the improvements to revert to the owner at the end of that time. In other words, at the end of twenty years the houses will be turned over to the owner plus the $75,000 theater. While the promoter of the enterprise was negotiating for these houses he was also taking a similar lease on a small store which immediately adjoined the handsome stone building and which faced on Church Street near the intersection of Fifth Avenue. He knew that the rear of this store touched the back yards of the six houses he had leased and, with that store made into an entrance-way, the success of his theater would be assured.

The whole plan had to be worked on the quiet, as there were nearly a dozen agents working against the plan. All of the moving picture people, together with the vaudeville house owners and a number of real estate dealers, would have squelched the deal at the start had they known what was on. Several times things almost fell through, but by exercising the pluck and push for which he is noted, Mr. Ready succeeded in getting the necessary papers signed, which, by law, have made the property his for twenty years.

As soon as the deal was through, there was the stock company to be formed, the architect to be consulted and several dozen other matters of importance to be looked after before any definite step could be taken. He continued to rent the store until the theater was completed, which helped to carry its own expenses. The houses have never been unrented for a day and, while one of them has been turned into a side entrance to the Princess, the other five bring in their regular rentals, thereby paying the lease for which he pledged himself to the owner. By the time other stockholders in moving picture theaters in Nashville caught on to the deal, plans were completed for the beginning of the new theater.

The ingenuity displayed in working out the little scheme has since been emphasized by the remarkable cleverness displayed by Mr. Ready in working up the whole enterprise. He spent ten months in travel all over the United States, his entire trip being devoted to the study of theaters in the larger cities of the country. Every little kink which can add to the comfort of the patron and the actor, found in other theaters, has been installed in the Princess and the result is the crowd likes to go and the actors themselves like to play in it.

Scenery, comfortable dressing-rooms and other conveniences appeal to the vaudeville people, while the unusual seating arrangement, the indirect lighting system, the quiet, rich tones of terra cotta, and the general air of comfort appeal to the folks across the footlights. Nor has comfort been emphasized at the expense of beauty, as is illustrated in the handsome curtain, the dainty finishings, the swinging baskets which hold the lights and other attractive features of the modern theater. The seating capacity of the Princess is 1,600, and so popular has it become that even standing room cannot be gotten after the vaudeville performance begins.

During the morning only moving pictures are shown, admission being five cents. In the afternoon there is one vaudeville performance and at night there are two, admission to these being ten cents; twenty cents being charged for reserved seats. These popular prices and the "full-measure shows" which are being offered, appeal to young, old and middle aged, and even the children of the city have gotten in the habit of attending the theater once a week anyway. The reason why so many children and women attend the Princess is accounted for by the rule which Manager Ready states emphatically to every performer on the week's booking: "Nothing goes on this bill except clean vaudeville; cut out anything women and children would be offended at."

MR. W. P. READY,
Proprietor and Manager Princess Theater, Nashville, Tennessee.

Many a tiff has occurred between the manager and some refractory vaudeville star who did not want to "cut anything out," but the reputation of the Princess has been made and the manager says he intends upholding this reputation straight through.

Given a clean bill, the famous Majestic Vaudeville Circuit, the best moving pictures to be procured, the best location in the city, and a very efficient manager,—and it is easy to see why the Princess Theater in Nashville is not only a popular theater, but a paying theater,—and it's the word "paying" which counts after all with the stockholders.

ON THE "CHILD LABOR" QUESTION.

About as big a film story as was ever issued on the child labor question is said to be found in Thanhouser's "Cry of the Children," suggested by the poem of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. The Thanhouser offices feel that exhibitors can utilize the film best by arousing an interest among all in a show's neighborhood who are known to be interested in the child labor question or sociological matters generally. It is suggested that invitations to see the subject be extended to these. There are two reels, released Tuesday, April 30.

THE NEW "REX" THEATER AT SALT LAKE.

From W. H. Swanson comes a few lines regarding the "Rex" Theater now in process of construction at Salt Lake City, Utah, that will be interesting to readers of the World. This house is being built by the Rex Amusement Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Utah, with $150,000 capital fully paid in. The officers of the company are: Wm. H. Swanson, president; Allan T. Sanford, vice-president; Max Daniels, treasurer; J. Rush Bronson, secretary and general manager.

The dimensions of the theater are 52 feet front by 235 feet deep. The entrance is ornate and spacious, tiled floors, marble walls and massive brass doors leading into a foyer 40 feet by 50 feet, elegantly trimmed and decorated in old French style. The auditorium is 153 feet deep and seats 1,800 persons. The chairs used are of the finest and cost $7.50 each. There will be a fully equipped stage 30 feet deep, with a proscenium opening of 18 feet by 26 feet. The construction of the building is concrete and steel.

Music will be supplied by a $20,000 pipe organ and chimes and a twenty-piece orchestra. There are 8,000 electric lamps used on the exterior and interior. Two Simplex projecting machines with dissolver and spot light have been installed in the operating room. It will surely be some theater.

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF "METOL."

The January issue of the Photographic News says: "Announcement has been made by the importers of Metol to the effect that the price of this standard commodity has been reduced materially. For practically two years the makers of Metol, which is a German product, have maintained their prices. Now, however, the greatly increased demand for Metol on the part of the motion picture interests has compelled the manufacturers to seek means by which 'Metol,' which is related to the expensive coal tar products, can be produced at a price which would warrant a reduction in the selling list. Recently this has been accomplished and as a result of continuous experiment and the discovery of a much quicker process in distillation, the present decrease in prices comes.

"Two German companies control the production of 'Metol,' these companies being among the largest manufacturers of photographic chemicals in the world. Their attitude toward the photographer has always been progressive, and this latest move is an indication of the German system, which at all times tends toward an equitable relation between manufacturer and consumer."

George L. Barrows, chief of the photographic department of the Berlin Aniline Works, said: "Since its first introduction upon the American market, 'Agfa Metol' has enjoyed a steady and increasing demand. Our sales for 1911 were greater than ever before, due to the almost universal use of 'Metol' as a developing agent in this rapidly growing field.

"This has resulted in marked attention being paid to the production of 'Metol' by our house, Actien-Gesellschaft fuer Anilin-Fabrikation, and we have recently been instructed to reduce the price according to the new list which is now being mailed to all consumers. We are particularly gratified over this reduction, as it enables us to meet the prices quoted on other chemicals said to be of identical character, produced by houses which have recently started to make photographic developers. Our pre-eminence in the production of standard 'Metol' and the large quantities we produce assure the photographer uniformity and absolute chemical quality. Therefore, we are convinced that those workers who have used 'Agfa' products in the most critical work will welcome the action we have taken in making the marked price reduction operative on March 1st."

The unusual sight of a patron of a house rising in his seat to denounce a picture took place recently at the Mikado on Easton Avenue, St. Louis, one of the Crawford houses. Thanhouser's "The Higher the Fewer," a religious picture, was being shown when Patrick Flood rose in his seat and publicly denounced the picture as being a travesty and a fling at the Catholic Church. Mr. Laumann, manager of the house, remonstrated with Mr. Flood and took the stand that the picture had been shown at his house two weeks before and had caused no comment. When asked by Mr. Laumann why he had not made his objection in person to him, Mr. Flood stated that as the picture had been shown publicly he was within his rights in denouncing it in the same manner. In an interview with the Moving Picture World man, Mr. Lanmann stated, that he had made a diligent canvass amongst his Catholic patrons and with the result that with but few exceptions the picture which had been passed by the National Board of Consorship, found very little if any disfavor.

A CLEVER BULLETIN.

ALMOST always we find matter of interest in the Cameraphone Bulletin, and we are reproducing here a clipping from a late issue that may help others who chat in their programs. At the same time we welcome the announcement that there is to be a third Cameraphone in Pittsburg. Houses run right help the business everywhere. This is the clipping:

> THE CAMERAPHONE PLAN OF SHOWING THE MOTION PICTURES.
> To the proprietor of a motion picture house falls the task of providing the class of films that his patrons wish to see, and upon his judgment in catering to the taste of the public depends largely the success or failure of the business. He must secure films that will please, just the same as the buyer of a clothing store must secure clothing that will please the customers. Another important part of his duties is the comfort and welfare of his patrons, and the theatre must be kept in first-class condition and proper ventilation provided. The latter is a very important item that is often overlooked.
> The next person in importance in a motion picture house is the operator. A poor operator can spoil the best of films, while a careful and experienced operator can handle a poor film in a manner that will eliminate many of its faults and bring out the best there is in it.
> The projecting machine is just an improvement on the old magic lantern, and used much in the same way. The film is placed between the light and the lantern and the picture projected at the rate of sixteen each second. The picture is changed so often that the reproduction on the screen appears to be continuous, but such is not the case, the picture being made by throwing the light through a stationary photograph. This is done through the use of an intermittent gear which, although the crank is revolved constantly, causes the film to move exactly three-fourths of an inch and then stop. A metal disk revolves in front of the lens, and from the former three triangular segments have been cut away. At the moment the cam wheel engages the gear and pulls down the strip of film one of the three solid portions of the revolving disk is between the lens and the screen. The film moves three-fourths of an inch in exactly the same time required for one of the solid portions of the disk to be in place before the lens.
> It will be seen from this, then, that the screen is actually dark during the space of time necessary for one picture to replace another. The change is so rapid, however, that it cannot be detected by the naked eye.

Mr. Blanchard Reports.

J. M. Blanchard reports the success of his extra matinee with Cinderella for the third time with reserved seats and special features. There are a lot of reels which make especial appeal to women and children that can best be handled as a special matinee attraction, and the use of reserved seats and an advance sale for these specials will gradually educate the clientele to the seats reserved in advance. N. E. Chaney, of Hillsboro, Ohio, uses this idea whenever he has a feature, and we hope soon to see the better class of theatres everywhere offer reserved seats for every performance. It will bring to the house many persons who do not care to take chances on getting a seat.

Some Chaney Ideas.

Mr. Chaney in a late program asks for suggestions looking to the betterment of his Orpheum theatre and offers a six month's pass for any idea accepted. It will bring out an avalanche of useless criticism and suggestion, but in with the chaff there will be much good grain. Patrons see, and sometimes resent, scores of things the management cannot possibly be expected to see and, in giving this evidence of the sincerity of his appeal, Mr. Chaney will constitute the bulk of his patronage members of his staff. They will look for faults, but they cannot help seeing the good points and so come to a fuller appreciation of the conduct of the house.

Another innovation, possibly suggested by this department, is the announcement that every room (class) in the Hillsboro schools below the High School grade will be provided with six tickets good at the matinees, which will be awarded as prizes for good behavior during the week.

The change to a new program each day instead of alternate days crowds the program space a trifle, though not at the expense of display, but we would suggest that the hours of performance be given on the title page. This is information that should appear on every piece of paper whether the house is continuous or with stated hours of commencement.

Still Doing Well.

The Columbia Amusement company, of Santa Rosa, Calif., sends on a late issue of the "Weekly Show News" to prove that this little publication still does good service. A single four-page sheet does duty for the Columbia, the Theaterette and the Nickelodeon, a page being given to each, but the front page is held for announcements and a chatty resume of the week causes the issue to be read. The management has removed the advance sale for the Columbia, which is divided between attractions and pictures, from the theatre to a local merchant, where the sale will not interfere with the house sale for the performance in progress. Local conditions determine whether the house or the outside sale is the more advantageous, but where the lobby sale is used there should be a special window for the advance.

Some of the "Show News" lines read a little stiffly, such as "The God of Wine Gets Stung—is a dramatic production." A classy classical comedy is more in keeping with the film and rather more attractive. With some thirty to fifty catchlines each week one is apt to grow careless, but it is worth while working a little harder to keep the stuff up to mark, and someone about the house should be appointed critic of the copy before it goes to the printer. It's about the only way to keep from falling into a rut.

Classical Concerts.

The Orpheum Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., one of the Saxe Brothers houses, has changed the Sunday musical matinee, recently alluded to in this department, to a Monday night fixture. The house has a pipe organ and a fine orchestra and each Monday night a classical program will be offered with local soloists of note, the feature being additional to the usual reels of film. We have already made mention of the Chaney Ladies' Nights, when there is added a musical program, and we are glad to note the growth of this idea. In Australia the photoshow is a combination of good music and good pictures at a price that makes possible really good music, and it is to be hoped that in this country the idea develops into the same scheme.

It is suggested that for these performances such reels as Von Weber's last Waltz, Verdi's Requiem, The Death of Mozart and similar features are particularly appropriate where the older ones may be had in good condition.

Here's a Good Idea.

Will W. Cox, of the Elite Theatre, Jackson, Tenn., handles his advertising in a fashion that should commend itself to others. Mr. Cox writes:

> Having read the majority of your talks to advertisers, and found many useful hints, I want to tell you of a little advertising deal that I have on that might be used to good advantage by other managers.
> I met the manager of the leading laundry here and arranged to have him place one of my advertisements in every package he turns out, which amounts to at least 2,500 pieces per week. For this service I agreed to run an ad slide for him on my curtain, I to pay for my printing and he to pay for his slides.
> He had seven slides made, and I had 20,000 pieces of matter printed, that is 2,500 each of eight kinds, and by using one slip each week you see I am prepared for a two months' run of "follow-up" dodgers, and am sure that they get INTO the homes. Another feature of this deal was that the laundry I am dealing with does not do work for colored people so my printing gets into the hands of whites only, which is quite an item here in the South.
> The 20,000 slips cost me $19.00, or 95c per thousand, which is cheap enough when you consider that they are printed on book paper. I got them at that price by having them all set up at once and run off at one impression and then cut, which saved a great amount of press work.
> Enclosed you will find copies of each of the eight kinds. Some are better than others of course, and two of them did not meet with my approval, as the printer did not set up the job as I wished it.
> Let me know through your department what you think of the idea, and the possibilities of getting proper results. If you think they justify re-printing in the department I would be glad to see them there.
> If anyone wants copies of them all I will send them on a request accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope.
> You will note the "ADMISSION now 5c." Of course that goes against the grain, but it was a case of have to. I have just changed this from a ten-cent vaudeville house and am fighting opposition of the same kind, so I couldn't expect to get ten cents for pictures alone under these conditions.

Print Wholesale.

There is a lot to be said in favor of bulk printing when it can be done. If the printer can handle sheets to the capacity of his press and cut up afterward, he saves the cost of handling and in this particular order there were but 2,500 impressions as against 20,000; a very considerable saving.

Mr. Cox uses stock catch heads in cut forms and writes his lines away from the cut, which does not always make for effective argument. For example a cut shows a finger pointing to the words "The Point" and in type is added "we want you to see is that the Elite Photoplay Theatre runs continuously from 1 P. M. to 11 P. M." There is no particular "kick" in that. There is one with a small cut showing a special script Elite in white against black. If this had been used as the stock head for each of the eight circulars, the cumulative effect of that white title by the end of the eighth week would have been vastly more effective where here the cut is used but twice in the eight circulars. There are some good lines in some of the circulars, but they are not pulled up. "Nothing is ever shown here that will be offensive to women and children," "Daylight pictures—no dark, gloomy interior," "Three $3,000 productions for only five cents," "You can't get better because there are none better made," are all good lines for small display, but the black and white Elite cut would alone bring returns. It is a mistake to put too much reading matter on a throwaway. One good line is all that will be read.

A Suggestion.

It will be noted that Mr. Cox, like many others, generously offers to send a set to those who will send a return envelope. In sending the request why not add some of your own advertising matter? It is a slight return for the courtesy shown and one that will be appreciated. The Photoplay exhibitors show a fraternal spirit that is not always to be found among the dramatic managers and we are surprised and proud to note the general spirit among the managers.

Be Like the Hen.

The New Boz theatre, Boise, Idaho, sends an eight-page program with a four-page colored cover with a special design for the front. There are two changes a week and the front part carries the underline: "Take this program home with you and read up the bill for the last half of the week," which is a decidedly effective way of putting things. The program, like many others nowadays, is patterned after the program of the Tenth Street theatre, Kansas City, and like that does not use chatty matter. Now that the Tenth Street is getting better each week in this regard, we hope that the numerous programs of which it is the Daddy will follow suit. Our idea would be a combination of the Tenth Street form with some of the Cameraphone Bulletin contents, some Chaney ideas and a stock lithographed cover.

The Boz has a full advertising clientele, but we think we would keep out the medical advertising on the inside front cover page even if we had to lose the cash. It may hurt to turn down a half page ad, but it will pay in the long run. We clip this house ad. It's a little loud but effective in its argument. Be like a hen.

> DID YOU EVER NOTICE?
> When a duck lays an egg she just waddles off as if nothing had happened. When a hen lays an egg there's a hell of a noise.
> The hen advertises. Hence the demand for hen's eggs instead of ducks'.
> —THE MORAL IS OBVIOUS

And in passing, please note, if you use the ad, you will find that hell when spelled out looks far less offensive than the ——— or h———.

Something Special.

The Idaho Society of Engineers held a convention in Boise last month and manager W. Fred Bossner declared in with a special picture show at the Boz with the Edison pictures of the Panama and the New York State Barge Canals and the Kalem aqueduct reel as well as a comedy, a girl swimmer picture and some stereopticon slides of engineering schemes, all of which formed a special bill of more than passing note.

What Wesley Says.

W. A. Wesley, of Gardner, Mass., sends in some more of his advertising including this bargain counter vaudeville and pictures that are worth more than a cent a reel. It runs:

> ONE CENT
> A Penny for a Reel of Pictures,
> A Penny for a Song, and the > VAUDEVILLE FREE
> Heat, Light and a Comfortable Seat thrown in
> Eight Reels of Moving Pictures and Two Illustrated Songs and three others for Ten Cents (if you come early), that's ten numbers for a cent apiece. It's most as cheap as the air you breathe, and take a tip from me, you are going to be entertained. You don't know who lives in town until you see them at the Theatre. All the "live ones" will be there.
> Read This and Then Make a Noise Like Ten Cents.
> Slip Up to the Ticket Window of the > COLLE OPERA HOUSE
> and get one of those "joy getting" pasteboards that admits you to the inner circle. The show for

This might be regarded as in poor taste in many houses, but Wesley knows his crowd and he frames his advertising to meet conditions. For its kind it's unusually good.

An Opening.

The United States theatre, of Cleveland, sends in an invitation for the opening of its new house at Woodland Avenue and 38th Street. The text is surmounted by an ornamental design of flags, bayonets and other military matters with a mortise for the name and address with the text in Old English but in sizes more easily read than most. There is a tendency to over ornateness that extends to the color flecked paper on which the announcement is printed. We think a smaller display in gothic without the cut would have been better, but the printing is neatly done and the general effect is good.

Says it Drew.

The Majestic Theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., sends two circulars which Manager S. B. Sturtevant writes filled the house on two occasions. As the seating capacity is 500 this is doing very well. One simply announces "Almost a mile of films will be run at the Majestic Souvenir Matinee today," giving the hour, the two vaudeville acts and the announcement that a souvenir will be given. The other is a card headed "5c for you" and announces that the card and five cents will admit any school child to a Valentine matinee when a special program for children will be run. The house uses the line "The Majestic, where everybody goes" on all it's printing and then hustles to make the line good.

Night View of the People's Theater, Portland, Ore.

Hints from the West.

Here are a couple of lines from a recent program of the People's Amusement Company with several houses in Portland, Oregon, and vicinity. It is this sort of chat that helps the house and in this instance the reference to the collaboration of Gov. West gives especial dignity to the first paragraph:

> ¶ Today we will commence to exhibit at our theaters slides showing work of the various Oregon state institutions. Every one of the pictures embraced in the list was taken under the supervision of the Hon. Oswald West, Governor of Oregon.
> ¶ Wait until you see the new Arcade and then gasp. It will be the handsomest small theater in the world and will contain every new idea that ingenuity and money can provide. Work will start on or about March 1, and by working three shifts of eight hours each, the management hopes to finish the work in four weeks.
> ¶ On Sunday, at the People's Theater we will put on an Edison film entitled, "Children Who Labor," directed against those of the rich who grind down the children of the poor. It is a very strong plea for action against a great evil and ought to command the approval of the entire body of the people. It also shows the good that pictures are doing throughout the world, the Photo-play being always arrayed on the side of right and justice.

The Photoplay which General Manager Winstock wrote in collaboration with Gov. West will shortly be produced by the Edison Company, and speaking of the Edison Company, Mr. Winstock writes that he is going to take the Edison "How Moving Pictures Are Made and Shown," on a starring tour through that section of Oregon, and with characteristic enterprise he will lecture the film in other than the houses controlled by his company. It takes a little nerve to give "the other fellow" something for nothing, but it pays in the long run.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

He Knows It All.

CORRESPONDENCE courses are falling. The old price was $30, then came the $20 course, an editress cut it down to a $5 registration fee with two dollars for each criticism, and now comes a western man with a full course for only $2.50. Better still, he guarantees that you will be successful if you will follow his instructions. Along the same lines he announces in capitals:

> I know all these things.
> I know what will sell and what will not sell.
> I know what will bring a good price and what will be considered only ordinary.

The last probably explains why he asks only the half of five dollars for his course, but there is no one who can tell what will and will not sell. It is possible to tell what stories have a chance of selling, but this applies only to those stories so markedly good or bad that their fate is written large. No one may foretell the fate of the middle class of stories for there are too many factors to be considered.

Just to prove what a seventh son of a seventh son he is, he declares he can tell what "crimes, business, themes, suggestions and actions are not permitted to pass the censors." If he can also tell what will pass the censors we'll stake him to a couple of jobs that will beat a two-fifty correspondence school for returns.

He also tells you "what words or dialogue to write into the story so that they may 'register' when projected upon the screen," which is something new to us.

There are almost two pages of the things he knows, much of which is necessary and useful information, but he complicates matters with some non-essentials to make the stuff look important, such as "the number of feet required for the projection of certain words," presumably in leaders, with which the author has nothing to do so that he keeps his leaders as brief as is consistent with clearness.

As we have said before there is only one school, that of experience, and we believe that the technical writers for this and other papers give far more that is of value than any school can possibly provide. Indeed, we know of one school the lesson papers for which contain entire paragraphs from the hints to writers prepared by Rolin S. Sturgeon, Archer McMackin and this writer for the Vitagraph, Essanay and Lubin companies, respectively. These are to be had free for a stamped and addressed return envelope. Building up on this six cent course, a subscription to this paper for one year costs three dollars and brings about seventy-five pages of practical instruction on the writing and marketing of scripts. The only other class room is the picture show where the picture on the screen should be studied and not merely looked at.

If you can write photoplays you will need little more than a groundwork of technique to start with. If you can't write photoplays you cannot gain that knowledge by paying someone thirty dollars. Why be a come-on?

What Solax Wants.

The Solax Company, Congress Avenue, Flushing, New York, wants high grade scenarios on social, political and dramatic themes as well as refined comedies. They state that they are willing to pay big prices for live stuff. In sending in comedies remember that Billy Quirk, formerly with Pathe, is their chief comedian.

More About Bison.

Richard V. Spencer, editor of the Bison Company, writes that the mention in this department of the Bison needs brought him more good writers than all the paid advertisements subsequently used. At the same time he has not succeeded in getting hold of just what he wants and he offers this fuller explanation in his rejection slip:

> We are in the market for the following type of scenarios: All Indian, Indian-Military, Indian-Emigrant, Civil War, and their various combinations of frontier life. Stories should be built on strong themes with original bits of business, have continuity and a strong heart or love interest.

From some of the correspondence we have seen between Mr. Spencer and authors we gather that most writers make the mistake of supposing that since most three-reel subjects are done from novels these original theme two-reel Bisons must have an equally ample plot. We think that what is preferred is a simple theme capable of spectacular development. It does not have to be a silly story to be a simple theme; it should be vital and interesting, but it should give the producer plenty of scope for the utilization of the large staff of the Bison-101 Ranch forces without tying him so rigidly to the story that the incidents become involved. We also understand that Mr. Spencer wants a running story with a chance for a break about the middle of it. Here is a new market and it may be a little slow to get into, but by watching the Bison two-reel releases you can get the idea.

Nestor is Prompt.

Some weeks ago we published several complaints regarding the delays in passing upon scripts sent the Nestor company and also printed the assurance of David Horsley that the condition would be remedied.

Under recent date Charles W. Henderson, of Kokomo, Ind., writes: "Sent Nestor a western the other day and they returned it stating that they are not producing western subjects at present and asking for high class dramas and refined comedies. They were prompt in returning the script. It was out only eleven days, which means that it did not stay in the studio much more than a day."

And in the same vein Miss Marguerite M. Jackson, of the Pomona (Calif.) Times, writes: "The person who thought the Nestor company careless in returning scenarios must have fared far worse than I did. Two weeks ago I wrote out a play and sent it in. In three days I heard from them and they were also kind enough to tell me wherein I had made my mistakes."

It will be seen that Mr. Horsley has more than kept his promise.

Save Postage Stamps on Essanay.

The enclosed notice is now being sent out to all Essanay contributors:

> We thank you for submitting enclosed scenario for our consideration, but at present time we have a very large stock of same on hand, yet to be produced, and, as we receive about five hundred scenarios a week, we feel that we cannot bestow upon each one the careful thought that we would care to, and is due to the author.
> Therefore, we will not solicit any more scenarios for several months, at which time we shall be glad to hear from you again.

As a somewhat similar notice is used by the Biograph to head off undesirables, we queried H. Tipton Steck, who replied: "We are loaded down with scripts and are mailing the enclosed to all writers." Due notice will be given when buying is resumed. Meanwhile hold back on Essanay.

Here's Another One.

We have had sent us a letter from an individual who claims to be the scenario editor of a company, not stated, who offers to put scripts into salable shape for a fee of two dollars. It is not quite as iniquitous as the scheme of the editor of another company, who uses the addresses gained through her official connection, to offer to sell scripts at double the usual commission, but if this man really is a scenario editor he should be fired, and if he isn't there are certain references to false pretenses in the statutes that apply. This is what he says:

> For a fee of $2.00 I will read, correct and revise your work. Will put it, not you, in touch with the market. If the submitted scenario contains any merit at all I will guarantee to arrange it so that you will have no difficulty putting it in a marketable condition.
> The writer is now connected with one of the foremost film manufacturers in this country. And is in a position to know just exactly the sort of stories their different policies demand. Every week I read and pass judgment upon not less than one hundred and fifty scenarios, although many are well written and show some merit, not more than one or two of the lot are salable. I know what type of story each studio in the industry is seeking. And I'm ready to beat your work into such shape as to enable you to sell it.
> How does this plan strike you?

Replying to the question, it doesn't strike us favorably. No one can honestly guarantee the sale of a story and an editor of scenarios should know this better than anyone else. Some pleasant day the post-office inspectors are going to get busy, for at this rate it will not be long before the line is overstepped by some one.

Can You See Things?

No, we don't mean what you mean, but the title is suggested by this line from a regular scenario writer:

> You must resort to your powers of visualization. If you are not able to visualize properly you would do well to give up trying to write photoplays, for if you cannot see the story yourself, how can you write it so that the director can get your thoughts? The more vividly you can see your picture the more vividly you are able to write it.

That's another way to tell you to write what you see rather than what you think. It sounds difficult, but perhaps you've been doing it all along. Stop and figure it out. Do you merely write a plot or do you write the play that you are acting as you write? One makes a plot and the other makes a play. Train yourself to do it. Before you start in to write out an idea, sit down and close your eyes and let the scenes pass in procession before your mental vision. Then go to the machine and while you re-enact the scenes write them down. After a time you'll not need the dress rehearsal, but will be able to see the action played as you write it and, by writing down that action, you are certain to get your ideas on paper, if only you will make allowance for the fact that you know a lot of things the audience does not concerning the relation of the characters, their thoughts and modes of action. Be sure you tell enough of this in action or leader to make the idea clearly understandable.

Here's a Cosmic Wail.

Here is a letter from an impatient sort of cuss who voices in John Henry style a comparatively common kick. He writes:

> May it please you to add this murmur to the cosmic wail.
> I am one of the moiety of unhanged criminals—the Scenario Writers, and I wrote one of the companies asking why my scripts had not been acknowledged. The said company in an indignant outburst skipped up on the pedestal of its integrity and drew it's feet in after it. Also they returned two of my scripts (all but one sheet), and did the Mark Anthony thing in two paragraphs about the thoroughness of their system.
> In the terseness of the vernacular—thoroughness of system, nothing. In any ordinary business office, and like all Scenario Writers, who would live, I have to work in a business office, a third rate clerk, at five dollars a week, could acknowledge receipt of a hundred manuscripts daily, so why the ever-readiness of the manufacturers to carp about stress of business. A simple acknowledgment of the receipt of MSS for consideration, is, I am forced to say, only common politeness.
> Why not treat us with a little more consideration? Although addicted to the unjustifiable habit of scenario writing, we are human and have feelings. Courtesy is cheap at one cent a post card.

We are afraid we have small sympathy with cosmic wails and anyhow George Kleine has patented Kosmik as a trade mark, but let's treat it seriously, anyhow, because it is serious to a lot of wailers.

The wailer has sent out a story and he wants to know if the company got it. He sent in an inquiry, of which the above may be a sample, and now he wants to know why. And echo answers "why?"

Why should the company sit down and write him a chatty letter telling him that the script got there all right, that it stood the journey well and it hopes it will make a long visit. Or why even the post card? Why be a piker? Why not demand a night letter?

Seriously, we are seeking to educate the scenario writer to an intelligent attitude and such complaints as this almost make us despair. Many who write scenarios, indeed the majority, lack the literary experience that should be the groundwork, and they take themselves too seriously.

We do not know of any large publishing company that sends out an acknowledgment of manuscripts received, though most will return an enclosed card where this is asked. It is not considered essential, so it is not done, and it is no more essential in the case of photoplay scripts.

The scenario writer is a salesman. He offers his wares to the buyer and stands at attention until judgment is passed. It is usual for the seller to wait the pleasure of the buyer, not the reverse, and too many scenario writers are apt to take a lofty attitude and demand as a right what is accorded by courtesy. The Edison Company recently gave up the practise of sending a receipt for scripts. Several have written to complain, yet we fail to see what basis for complaint there is. It is not now the practise of the Edison Company to send receipts. Those who demand receipts are not compelled to send their scripts to the Edison Company. The proposition is plain.

Receipts for scripts is not a matter of common politeness. It is a courtesy that has been so much abused in most instances that it is being withdrawn. It is a practise that does not obtain in other lines, and those who want to know if their scripts arrive safely should either register their envelope and at that time explain to the registry clerk that a receipt is demanded, or a self addressed post card may be enclosed with the request that it be mailed back to the author to announce the safe arrival. The latter plan is followed by magazine writers of experience. It is commended to the cosmic wailers.

Gone Out of Business.

Mr. Siegmund Lubin, head of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, advises us that the correspondence school and sales bureau started by a member of the scenario staff apparently with the consent of the company has gone out of business. He writes "This kind of business was done without my knowledge and I have stopped it at once. I am promised that such a thing will not happen again."

We have refrained from giving mention to this school because we were confident that when Mr. Lubin became aware that an employee sought to occupy the positions of both buyer and seller he would take proper action, as he has done.

INQUIRIES

W. McC.—We are not aware of any three-reel release of the Custer massacre, but believe that the Bison Company has a two reel release of the subject coming.

F. H. E.—If you will send to the publishers for a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay" (price $1), you will find these matters fully taken up. In brief you do not use dialogue at all, but write in action, since it is the action and not the dialogue that tells the story. Divide your action into scenes and give a cast of characters and a short synopsis of the plot.

M. H.—We presume that you have reference to "Examination of the Stomach by X-rays," released by the C. G. P. C. (European Pathe), on December 1, 1911. The reel is in no sense a fake. Without going into an elaborate explanation the photography was made possible by adding chemicals to the food eaten by the patient to make the definition clearer and then making the photograph. This may not be very clear, but it's the best we can do in the space at our command.

MARION.—Charles Blackwell is not an El Kalem, but just a plain Kalemite. He is in California. He is usually seen in company with Miss Alice Joyce. Miss Walker was Vitagraphing the last we heard.

LILLIAN.—If you will read the answer to Marion, just above, you will find that the "tall, slim actor who usually plays opposite Miss Joyce," is Carlyle Blackwell. It was he who payed in "Norma from Norway."

L. M. A.—David Copperfield, the boy in the Thanhouser production, was Miss Flora Foster. After he grew up Ed. Genung was his interpreter.

L. L. L.—So far as we can learn, the Fox and Nestor companies are entirely and wholly distinct business entities.

NANCY L.—We are sorry we cannot add to your store of information regarding the Biograph players, but Reva Greenwood is with the Edison company.

CARLETON.—There is no school that teaches operating the cinematographic camera. Usually camera men are educated by some company or gain their knowledge by acting as helper to some experienced man. We know of one player who was nice in helping the camera man with his heavy load and in turn was promoted to be cameraman when another was needed. Sometimes a regular photographer is given opportunity to learn, but this happens only when he is on intimate terms with the officials of some company. Taking motion pictures differs so radically from regular photographic work as to constitute a special section of the art. The conditions in the West are the same as here. Good camera men are in demand but few companies will take the trouble to train them. If that third question refers to operating the projection machine, make your inquiry of Mr. Richardson. We know of no line operating motion picture theaters on its steamers, though we think that it is only a question of time. The idea is far more feasible than the establishment of a regular stock company.

MABEL E. H.—Your inquiry goes back of the time when casts were noted and so cannot be answered. Henry Walthall is the second person you ask about. The company does not know who it was that played Violet in "A Western Memory." Hope you have better luck next time.

CRITIC.—This is an inquiry department, not a muck-raking column, but the answer is that while some incidents may be similar the first story is not paralleled. Regarding the second play, we think you are in error. We fail to detect more than a passing resemblance. If you are familiar with both the play and the photoplay and make a suggestion like that, you should change your nom de plume.

V. A.—Joseph Graybill played the Younger Brother in Thanhouser's "On Probation." Other answer next week.

J. A. M.—Miss Viola Alberti was the wife in Thanhouser's "On Probation." The plumber's wife in the same company's "The Guilty Baby," was Miss Lucy Diestel. We cannot identify the players in imported films. Inquiry so seldom develops any information that such questions are now barred. In answer to your Essanay questions: Howard Missimer was the Deacon in "The Deacon's Reward," and in "Town Hall Tonight," Arthur Mackley was the sheriff, Victor Potel the tall and Augustus Carney the short actors.

PICTURE FAN.—We regard questions as to the ages of photoplayers as too personal, more particularly when the inquiry refers to a lady. We think the player in question young enough not to be ashamed to tell, but we are not going to ask. The Melies Company does not place the player you ask for. She is a new member of the stock company whose name has not been sent East yet. Inquiry will be made. The Essanay answer next week. Miss Anne Schaefer seems to be heading most of the recent Western Vitagraph casts, though Miss Florence Turner played one or two parts before she went on vacation. Miss Cleo Ridgley is with the Rex Company as was apparent from a short article in our last issue. There are several capital woman riders in photoplay, but no nominated champion. We are of the opinion that Miss Storey would hold up her end with any of them. We have not yet obtained the cast of the Bison's "The Run on the Bank."

W. H. K.—The boy in Lubin's "The Office Favorite" was Bennie Zieman, otherwise, Bennie from Lubinville. He is about seventeen.

A. M.—No particular paper is required, but the best is the usual typewriter size, 8½ by 11 inches. Do not use "onion skin" or other thin papers and do not use foolscap. The latter is a confession of amateurishness that may affect the size of the check if not the chance of acceptance.

W. O.—Harold Shaw was the boy in Edison's "The Lure of the City." He was also the Carter's son in "Home."

L. T. C.—The acceptance of a script does not promise immediate production. As an extreme example, a coming Lubin reel will carry "Hoodooed" and "Her Uncle John." The last was accepted a couple of weeks ago and the former bought some two years ago.

A. B. I.—The younger sister in American's "The Smoke of a .45" was Miss Jessalyn van Trump. William Bracken was Indian Jim in Melies' "The Mortgage."

G. M. C.—In Kalem's "The Mother," Arthur Donaldson was the priest. The picture was made in Ireland. Jack J. Clark and his mother were the mother and son. Warren J. Kerrigan was the son in "Objection Overruled."

R. P. E.—Send a stamped envelope for a list of scenario addresses. They are not always the same as the addresses given in the trade advertisement.

P. L.—The two girls in Essanay's "Pals," were Misses Lily Branscombe and Mildred Weston. Jack Hopkins was Jack in Lubin's "Jack's Umbrella." He looks not unlike Arthur Johnson, but they are not brothers. Harry Myers is still with Lubin, but not in that section of the company which Mr. Johnson heads.

P. T. C.—We have not seen this one for several weeks. Maurice Costello and Leo Delaney are not brothers.

C. D. T.—Copyright does not die with the author, but becomes a part of his estate, and may be renewed for the additional term the same as though the author lived. Address the publisher for permission if you are sufficiently interested. It will be better to write him than to have him write you.

G. E. C.—Miss Ethel Elder is now with Powers and will be seen in those releases shortly.

"THE DETECTIVE DOG" (Solax).

CAST.

James Harper, a secret service detective.......Darwin Karr
Mary Harper, his wife....................Blanche Cornwall
Kitty, their child..............................Magda Foy
"Jack," the dog............................"Lewis Solax"
Richard Toole, chief of counterfeiting gang......Lee Beggs
Police, counterfeiters and storekeepers.

This is a thrilling and picturesque melodrama, abounding with an abundance of animal interest. The wonderful light effects and mechanical contrivances are revelations in camera possibilities. It is a stirring story lucidly told and forcefully acted.

Glad of an opportunity to repay his kind master for the care and attention he has received at his hands, good old Jack, the detective dog, follows the scent of his master and, like a big faithful and sacrificing friend, rescues him from the teeth of a jig-saw in the den of counterfeiters. The dog shows wonderful intelligence. His acting is startingly natural and picturesque. The production will be released Wednesday, March 10th.

NEW FILM EXCHANGE HEAD.

Mr. I. A. DeSomers has been the Sales Manager of the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee the past few years, and served in various other capacities since the organization, has been appointed Manager of the Western Film Exchange of Kansas City, Mo., by J. R. Freuler, owner, to take effect March 5th. Mr. DeSomers has a complete and thorough understanding of every branch of Film Exchange work, having had considerable experience in all departments, working his way up from the bottom. His knowledge and efficiency in this work offers the company complete assurance of a successful career. His many friends in the Northwest will watch the progress of his work with interest, and feel that his pleasing manner will no doubt win for him as many new friends in the new territory.

ANDERSON PLAYS INDIAN.

Mr. G. M. Anderson, director of the Essanay Western Company, has never been seen to more excellent advantage than in "The Indian and the Child," a beautiful Western drama booked for release in April. Mr. Anderson plays the role of the Indian, and gives the character gripping impersonation. He is well supported by a picked cast, and the little girl sharing the leading honors is a splendid little actress of great natural ability.

Comments on the Films

"HER FACE" (Edison), March 19.—A pleasant little romantic comedy with a poet and a girl (the face) across the court as centers of interest. He had written some lines (he called them poetry) to her; the wind blew these from his desk and landed them across the court and in her room. He climbed in after them and got caught. The fun comes from the good acting, especially of Mr. McDermott as the poet. Miss Miriam Nesbit and Mr. Shaw are the other two chief players. It is well photographed and makes a very desirable filler.

"OUT OF THE DEPTHS" (Essanay), March 19.—Some will recognize this story. We have read it before, not seen it in pictures, and commend it in this instance for its effectiveness and its good acting. The man stole for his sick mother, was caught and served his term. Later, he had lived down the past and was elected mayor. A ruthless blackmailer "bled" him to desperation and he refused the last demand. Before the blackmailer could harm him, however, the scoundrel is killed. A flash of lightning, very well suggested, kills him in our sight. The storm scene is very good. The picture was made by the usual Chicago company and is clearly photographed. It is almost a feature.

"FATHER'S TOOTHACHE" (Cines), March 19.—A farce comedy that is very much like others we have seen. However, perhaps the majority of spectators will find it fresh enough. The doctor and the girl were in love. Her father objected, but gets a bad toothache. The man is the only doctor in town and makes his own terms with father. We heard no laughs. It is fairly well photographed. A filler, except that it has an excellent picture of the City of Tripoli on the same reel.

"THE CITY OF TRIPOLI" (Cines), March 19.—These photographs give a new and instructive idea of the capital of the district just occupied by Italy. The city is not wholly Oriental, for it has a large Catholic church. The film has some pleasing street scenes.

"THE EPIDEMIC IN PARADISE GULCH" (Selig), March 19.—Freshness in its situation, and humanity in its acting make this school teacher and cowboy comedy an acceptable feature picture. The "epidemic" was not measles, nor mumps, it was just ordinary misery. There was only one pretty teacher and a dozen good looking cowboys. Big Bill was the first affected and the kindly teacher coddled him. The other boys soon caught it and were all down at once. The teacher saw through the millstone and prescribed a big dose of something bitter and no dinner. The ranch cook gives as much fun, for the time he is in the picture, as even the teacher. The scene in the kitchen when the boys try to get a snack behind his back is very good. The photographs are good enough.

"THE OLD SILVER WATCH" (Vitagraph), March 19.—The picture tells a very good, convincing story about two children (Adele de Garde and Kenneth Casey play the parts) who were left orphans and adopted by different people who lived far apart. They took different names and grew up without knowing anything about each other. Mr. Costello and Miss Baird take the grown-up parts. The man still has his mother's old silver watch. By chance, he and his unknown sister meet, fall in love and are about to be married when, at the altar, the silver watch tells the secret. Beside these players, Kate Price, Miss Gardner, Mr. Brooke, Miss Finch, Tom Morey and others have lesser parts. The photographs are good. The spectators watched it closely. One man seated near the reviewer, volunteered the remark, "Things could happen just like that" They could. The picture is a safe feature.

"THE PREACHER AND THE GOSSIPS" (Lubin), March 16.—Mr. Arthur Johnson plays in this picture a young, unmarried minister, and Miss Helen Marten plays the pretty village milliner with whom he is in love. There are several old maids around who are sour inside, but make sweet faces at the minister until they see that there is no chance for them. The chance comes, however, for one of them to make trouble. She reads and misunderstands a half-finished letter of the preacher's. It was to his sister. The gossips, when it was shown to them, at once concluded that it is to Helen Greenwold, the milliner, and take it to the deacons. There's a great scandal. The picture isn't accurately conducted. There are things in it that, on technical grounds, one could find fault with. Its story will offend none. Plenty of young preahers have suffered in similar ways. It is very well acted, especially the church servie. The village street and quaint old houses are interesting and the photographs are "clear as a bell." It may serve as a feature, or nearly one.

"THE ROOT OF EVIL" (Biograph), March 18.—In our opinion, the most interesting picture of the week. It seems, at the start, the same old situation. The rich man's daughter has secretly married her father's secretary and he finds it out and disowns her. Then we have the widow and her child coming home in time to thwart the designs of the man who is scheming to obtain the old man's fortune. It is apparently the same old story and yet how different, how much more humanly convincing than the best pictures of this story that we can remember. Its vitality comes from the peculiar characteristics of the persons; they are not types, but new individuals. These persons dramatially affect the narrative, the path the story takes toward its denouement, in a wilful, lawless and yet entirely natural way. It seems inevitable.

The interest doesn't center in any one character; it is merged in the whole. Yet the characters are very clearly cut and two of them (the child and the designing "legal adviser" of the old man) are intensely interesting studies. The man who plays this schemer seems to be a new player among the Biograph people and, if so, he is a noteworthy addition to their forces. We might add that a good player is fortunate in starting with the Biograph Company. He has a better chance of making a reputation than in most places.

"THE BLACK WALL" (Vitagraph), March 18.—A story of an adventure of children (Kenneth Casey and Adele de Gard) in a coal mine. The black wall is the debris of coal after a cave-in that blocks the passage. To be caught behind it, as the children with several miners were, is to be entombed alive. The story was "taken by the authority of the United States Bureau of Mines." It is very instructive. There is no melodramatic interest in it; it is a clean, convincing, naturally pictured story of adventure. The photographs are good. We commend the picture. It seemed to interest the audience very much.

"SUNSET" (Vitagraph), March 16.—A love story set on a ranch near the ocean. It takes us through a tract of heart-interest that we have explored very often and, although it is well acted and competently conducted, it is slow. It lacks atmosphere; even the photographs are hard, mechanical. The backgrounds are interesting, however.

"THE PRICE OF A SILVER FOX" (Lubin), March 14.—Silver fox carries a very valuable skin. It isn't a species; but a kind, like genius among men. One is born into a family of grey foxes now and then, and is usually cleverer and stronger than his brothers and sisters. The ease with which the fox in this story was captured doesn't strongly convince; but that doesn't harm the story very much. It is a love story with Miss Ormi Hawley as the society girl who promises her suitor that she will wed him, if he'll get her a silver fox. He didn't have any difficulty getting it; but in keeping it he became terribly frost-bitten and disfigured. An Indian tried to steal it from him. The story has little that is truly fresh and drags, especially at its artificial times. The photographs are good. It's a good filler.

"THE ARROW OF DEFIANCE" (Pathe), March 16.—An Indian story showing the chance escape of two children from a band of truculent redmen on the war trail. One was a white girl of about six and one was an Indian boy, of about eight, whom the white girl's parents had adopted. They got up on an old horse just for fun. The war party came. The boy saw it and they galloped off to the fort. The photographs are poor and the backgrounds rather commonplace. The story isn't strong or vital and it is very slight. It will make a fair filler.

"HIS WIFE'S MOTHER" (Lubin), March 13.—Mrs. Walters, who takes many old lady's roles in Lubin pictures, gives in this a delightful portrayal of a dear, old lady, rather spunky, whose heart was most certainly in the right place. Of course, a few adjectives don't describe just what kind of old lady she pictures, for her portrayals, as every one knows, are full of atmosphere. It is the best thing in this picture by all odds. It convinces us while the story does not. Miss May Buckley plays, as well as the role will let her, the young wife and daughter and Mr. Jack Holliday intelligently takes the part of husband and son-in-law. He doesn't like grandmamma at first; but she comes to his rescue when he has used his employer's money to speculate with. The photographs and the sets are very good, indeed. Lubin sets are the best made and trimmed sets that we have, just at present.

"PERSONALLY CONDUCTED TRIP TO BERMUDA" (Edison), March 16.—A well photographed comic travelog of the islands eastward from Florida in the Atlantic. The comedy is slight and rather artificial, but the views are interesting and the film acceptable as entertainment. A desirable filler.

"A MIDGET SHERLOCK HOLMES" (Pathe), March 13.—A very small boy with beard and make-up to look like a detective is the center of interest in this farce. He and his friend, the hobo, have an amusing adventure with the black-hand. There are several good laughs. The photographs are good. It is a fair filler.

"DAIX AND HIS DOG" (C. G. P. C.), March 13.—This vaudeville act of a very clever dog is on the same reel with the above. It is well photographed and interesting.

"WHEN DUTY CALLS" (Pathe), March 14.—A very well photographed picture showing the confusion of a burglar brought about by a very noble faithfulness to his duty of a physician. The physician, struggling to save from a burglar a sum of money entrusted to him, is wounded. He had received a call to a sick baby and in spite of his wound does his duty. The burglar, on coming back to his house with the money he had stolen, finds there the physician he had wounded, attending his child. He is overcome and, when the whole truth is shown to him, returns the metal box with the money and falls on his knees beside the physician, a man thoroughly convinced of wrong doing. It is a good healthy picture.

"A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCE" (Kalem), March 13.—The object of this picture is to tell an entertaining story; yet it is likely to make one's blood boil by its pictures of convict life in the prison camps in the South. It is not a horrible picture; many of its scenes are extremely beautiful, especially those showing the Everglades with the quiet waters and tangled growth of its forests, their trees covered with "graybeard" moss. The man was innocent, was convicted and suffered with other prisoners. A girl of the country pitied him and, when he escaped with others and bloodhounds were set upon their trails, she hid him. He was recaptured, however, and later pardoned; then he returned to her. The story is good, interesting and full of acceptable freshness. The escape and chase are both very well managed. The photographs are very fair. It is a very desirable filler.

"ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS IN ROME" (Cines), March 16.—This is a very clearly photographed picture of wild animals in captivity. The quarters of the lions and tigers are so like wild, rocky hillsides that they seem the natural localities where these beasts live. We commend the picture highly.

"OUT OF TUNE" (Cines), March 16.—A slight but mildly amusing farce on the same reel with the above.

"THE BANDIT'S CHILD" (Essanay), March 16.—See page 768, issue of March 2, 1912.

"ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA" (Selig), March 16.—A very excellent picture, indeed; very well photographed under the circumstances and one that should make a sure feature. See page 952, March 16, 1912.

"RECONCILED BY BURGLARS" (Kalm), March 18.—A farce that is briskly conducted and amusing all the way through. It made one good laugh near the end. It is a picture in which no one thing that is very funny happens, but each succeeding scene adds to what has gone before until the spectators break forth in laughter. The photographs are good. It is a very good filler.

"THE KALEMITES VISIT GIBRALTA" (Kalem), March 18.—On the same reel we find this extremely interesting travelog. It is very fairly pictured, and commendable.

"THE NEW CONSTABLE" (Lubin), March 18.—A fairly well photographed farce played by many pretty girls and two men, the old constable who drove the servant girls away from the district, and the new constable who kept them there. Of course, other men also appear for a moment. It became amusing toward the end; at the latter part there was laughter throughout the house.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 12, 1912" (March 18).—Perhaps the best item this week is a very amusing picture of water tobogganing in China. It shows a sloping rock, the water of a stream washing it, and the natives (one or two white men) coming down on banana leaves. One item shows snow coasting in the Alps. Others show the devastation of wind and flood in the South and West, a fire in a country town in Germany, a new fast F. I. A. T. racer automobile, the sinking of a steamship (the Madison) in shoal water, and a railroad wreck.

"THE BELLE OF NEW ORLEANS" (Kalem), March 15.—A picture of about sixty years ago in New Orleans. It is a conventional love story, not at all convincing either in atmosphere or action; but it is pleasingly acted. The story drags at first, but becomes more engrossing later. The backgrounds are interesting, but do not at all suggest New Orleans; they might have been taken in California. It is a good filler.

"THE GIRL OF THE LIGHTHOUSE" (Selig), March 18.—Mr. Herbert Bosworth and his usual company play in this picture an acceptable story of love in the salty atmosphere around a lighthouse on an island on the Pacific Coast near San Diego. It opens in calm weather, and takes us through a storm in a story in kind somewhat like "Shore Acres." The villain, who has also taken a fancy to the keeper's pretty daughter, tries to wreck her lover, the fisherman, by tampering with the lights. The girl manages to get back to the lamps and relight them in time. Some of the views of the stormy sea are worthy of the highest praise as photographs. The interiors also are extremely good. The picture's fault is that it tries to show us too much. We can't expect a picture of the hero's barque in dangerous seas and, if we are shown it in calm weather, we are not affected by it. Perrhaps if some of these things were left to our imaginations, we would have felt a deeper thrill. It is a desirable picture, nearly a feature.

"FOR THE COMMONWEALTH" (Edison), March 15.—A picture for prison labor reformers. It does not tell a good, strong story; that is, it doesn't convince us as a picture of life nor of human fates in any particular way; but it does convince us as a picture of human fates in a broad, general way. As a tract, it is first class, almost compelling in its teaching. Miss Mary Fuller plays a deserted wife, who has her husband (played by Mr. Shaw) arrested and sent to prison. This situation is used to explain the conditions that make prison labor, in direct competition with outside labor, an injustice. A better way is offered. It is a picture very well worth while.

Independent.

"IN THE BAY OF BISCAY" (Lux), March 22.—An industrial picture showing us much that is interesting in connection with the fishing industry of western France. The photographs are very good and much of the film is very beautiful. It is short, but worthy.

"ARABELLA BECOMES AN HEIRESS" (Lux), March 22.—On the same reel this comic picture in which Arabella inherits her master's estate displacing the old man's relatives. Father and mother make the son court Arabella, and foolish, simple Arabella gives up the will; but her lawyer has a copy. It is a thoroughly wholesome, ironical farce and will be acceptable anywhere. The two on this reel give instruction and entertainment and both parts will be popular. It is a desirable release to show.

"THE MAN FROM THE WEST" (Imp.), March 18.—Mr. King Baggot plays the breezy man from the West who has made his "pile," and is visiting relatives in the city. Steve doesn't know social distinction and falls in love with the pretty young cook (played by Vivian Prescott). He escapes from a dance to marry her. The story is brisk and the acting makes it sincere and amusing. Mr. Shay, Miss Krouse and Miss Violet Horner ably support the leaders and make the picture, which is also well photographed, a desirable filler.

"BETTER THAN GOLD" (Imp.), March 21.—The gambler's wife left her baby with the miner from whom her husband had stolen a bag of gold-dust—the baby girl was "better than gold." Years pass and the girl grows up into a well educated young lady, the ward of Jim the miner, who is also a priest (played by Mr. Pollock). Miss Margarita Fisher plays the remarkably contrasted roles of aged mother of the girl, "Denver Jean," and Janette, the girl just home from the convent. The story told by the picture seems hardly to justify itself on account of its slightness. Miss Fisher's double impersonation is the picture's chief point of interest. The photographs are good, but most of the scenes are studio pictures.

"A PAIR OF JACKS" (Nestor), March 20.—The Jacks are played respectively by Geo. Gibbard and Jack Conway; their wives are played by Victoria Tarde and Eugenie Tarde. The latter, as played, is of a jealous nature and without inquiring for reasons takes offense because of the other Jack's wife and baby. She is given plenty of reason for her awakened suspicions and she also gets her father excited over it. There's a struggle for a short gun; but the tragedy is averted. It has one of those climaxes during which one fairly aches to have some one in the picture "cuss" and tell the truth and end the suspense. The photographs are very good. The picture is a good filler.

"THE FEUDAL DEBT" (Nestor), March 18.—While there are things in this picture not quickly made clear, yet as a picture of a feud, root and branch and fruit, and the possible interplay of forces, and also the conflict between love and vengeance that may come out of such neighborhood wars, it is amply understandable, is in truth, a fine success. It is one of those pictures in which the atmosphere itself furnishes the story. The situation that the picture takes is fine; the ending of the story, as shown is good, but not so strong as the situation led us to expect. It is very naturally acted and clearly photographed. We call it a feature, yet are not wholly sure.

"A NEW LEASE OF LIFE" (Republic), March 19.—This picture takes us from the almost heartless Great White Way and the life in New York City, with its gaiety and its shadows, to a sanitarium in the hills where tuberculosis patients are cared for and brought back to vigorous life. It is one of those pictures that are at once valuably instructive and deeply interesting. The story is tense and full of red blood, and is well acted. Much charm is given to the picture by its excellent, well-photographed views both of the city and of the wintry mountain country. It makes a desirable feature picture for all kinds of occasions in all kinds of places.

"UNLUCKY MIKE" (Great Northern), March 23.—A comic picture of a clown burglar. He turns the house topsy-turvy; but is arrested. The photographs are sharp blacks and whites. The picture is very light, indeed.

"THE TANKVILLE CONSTABLE" (Imp), March 23.—A dream picture and the fun in it comes from the unhappy adventures in his dream, of Eben Green, constable, wsa was determined to stop automobile speeding. These cured him of dislike for speeders. The picture is very slight and its humor is not very sparkling. The photographs are fair. It is on the same reel with the Russian dancer.

"CLASSIC DANCES BY COUNTESS DE SWINSKY" (Imp), March 23.—A picture of marvelously artistic dancing. But let us say quickly that it must be put on with appropriate music, if it is to get over. This artistic dancing is very dramatic; it expresses a wide range of emotions and so clearly that it seems almost articulate at times. It expresses the feeling of the music that goes with it, making the music double effective. To play ragtime or sentimental ballad music with it will be like playing "Tristan und Isolde" on the stage with an orchestra that knows only "The Runaway Girl." Get the right music from the producer, advertise a masterpiece of Russian dancing and rehearse it; then you can expect success. There is nothing indecent in it, although it is danced with bare feet and bare lower legs.

"CONVICT B-75" (Ambrosio), March 20.—A picture of sentiment set in and near a great Italian prison. The center of interest is between Convict B-75 and the jailor's little daughter, aged about seven, who befriends him. Later, he is pardoned, he is freed; yet is still kept in the prison "by the bonds of affection." The picture is too slow; it gets wearisome before the end. The photographs are only fair, the film of full length.

"FOR HOME AND HONOR" (Champion), March 18.—It tells the story of an habitual bigamist. The center of our interest is in his second wife. When he married her he thought his first wife was still alive, but found in the next morning's paper that she had just died. Later he told her that their marriage was not legal and she married again. He appears again on the scene, tries to force her to run away with him and she wounds him with a revolver. He now owns up and she gets a divorce, her new husband standing by her. The picture takes up a rather sensational train of circumstances, but it is well conducted, pleasingly set and acted and has the atmosphere, let us call it, of fancy; it doesn't offend with revolting realism. It is good entertainment.

"THE DESERTER" (Bison 101), March 15.—A big feature release in two reels. The deserter is a second lieutenant, who, rejected by the colonel's daughter and disgraced by his part in a drunken row, leaves the post in civilian clothes. It is in early frontier days and an Indian uprising is imminent. A party of immigrants find him half dead in the desert and care for him. The savages attack the little band. The deserter risks his life to break through the "circle of death," and get help from the fort. He arrives in time, but dies and is buried with honors. It is a big, stirring, well-made picture, almost as good as "War on the Plains." It is a more emotional picture than any other of the big 101 releases.

"THE FULL VALUE" (American), March 18.—A three-cornered romance. The boss and his handsome clerk are rivals for the stenographer's affections, and the clerk, made jealous is impudent and gets fired. The boss then shows his true character, but the girl refuses him. To get even, he tries to defraud the girl's mother in a sale of property, but the hero overhears and intervenes. The picture is not far above commonplace; but it doesn't drag. The best "Flying A" players act in it and the photographs are good. It is a fair filler.

"A CHILD OF THE TENEMENTS" (Solax), March 22.—A little child (Solax Kid) is sick. The father (Mace Greenleaf) and the mother (Blanche Cornwall) have tried their best to get away to California so she can recover; but everything seems against them. The mother is tempted and steals money. The discovery of this theft, the attitude of the man from whom the money was taken and the whole incident is dramatically handled. It makes a good, interesting picture. The photographs are good. We commend it as a feature.

"A SYMPHONY IN BLACK AND WHITE" (Eclair), March 21.—A story of the darkey quarter of the city, with sketches of Bohemian life and home life in Darkiedom. Poor Pompey, the lover and the picture's hero, gambles away a "borrowed" suit of clothes and comical happenings follow. They are a bit too complicated to be wholly clear. Some of the scenes are photographic gems. A very good filler.

"HER FIRST ASSIGNMENT" (Powers), March 23.—She was bound to get a newspaper story and was writing it up in a strange man's apartment when he came home. He called up the police and was going to have her arrested when, by a careless move, she got the revolver and had the police take him instead. Then she wrote it all up as her story. It is a mystery picture that becomes clear only at the end. It isn't very convincing. The photographs are good.

"SCENES FROM THEATRICAL LIFE" (Eclair), March 24.—This picture is listed among the week's releases as "At the Height of Her Triumph." It is extremely well acted. The great actress, when she was an abandoned child, sleeping on the cold parapets of the Seine in Paris, was adopted by an actor. The years have separated them, foster father and daughter; but at the height of her triumph, she finds him again in poverty and distress. It is very beautiful and artistic and we call it a good feature picture. The photographs are perfect.

"PHILAE" (Eclair), March 24.—Philae is the famous city of temples in Nubia, Egypt, which was necessarily flooded by the new Assuan dam. The views are blue and show what one in a small boat would see, if he sailed about the half-submerged city and looked at its temples and courts. It is very good and strengthens this release to be a very sure feature.

"LEAP YEAR" (Majestic), March 19.—Two sisters and a man; the man is in love with one sister and has an engagement ring for her; the other one, it being leap year, asks for it and gets it. The man is in despair and gets up a scheme to make the unwanted fiancée get "cold feet." The right girl proves true to him in spite of his tramp "father." Mr. Herbert Prior plays the tramp (he is recognizable only at moments now and then) and the girl of the man's choice is played by Miss Mabel Trunnelle. The picture is good entertainment, is brisk, and the photographs are good. Perhaps it is not a sure feature; but it is a good, desirable filler.

"COUNT HENRY, THE HUNTER" (Solax), March 20.—Billy Quirk plays Henry and tells Munchausen stories of hunting to the ladies. He "cuts out" the American lover of the heroine, and the boys, for revenge, "put up" a fake bear hunt on him. The bears are clothed in plush. The photographs and mechanical work are good. It will hardly appeal strongly to cultivated people.

"THE BACHELOR'S CLUB" (Solax), March 20.—On the same reel is this farce in which a drunken man is dressed up like a lord and made to think his former life a dream. They dress up a man, Billy Quirk, in woman's clothes and have her take him to the Bachelors' Club costume ball. The drunken man's wife hears of it and attends, also in fancy dress, and breaks up the party. The photographs are good. There is very little real humor in it.

"HIDE AND SEEK" (Reliance), March 20.—A picture of a great temptation; but one that somehow fails to get over strongly. Two men, one a clerk and one an expressman, know of a certain large sum of money in a desk and they enter the house to get it. The conduct and acting of the situation are very well done; but it was a rather unbelievable step for just these two men, just ordinary men, so far as we are shown. The culprits are captured. The picture will serve very well as a filler; but the story is neither vital nor pleasant.

"JEALOUSY" (Reliance), March 23.—Just for a joke, the newly married wife's chum came to hee her friend dressed as a man. She was bashful about letting the husband of her friend see her in the man's togs. So, on his sudden coming home, she and her friend retreat into the bed room. The young and not very experienced wife is angered by her husband's natural jealousy and refuses to tell him who the boy is, but, just as a tragedy is near, the husband recognizes the girl. Mr. Wm. Walthall plays the husband, Miss Fernleigh, the wife, and Miss Robinson the masquerader. It is well photographed and very well acted.

"UP FROM THE PRIMITIVE" (Reliance), March 23.—An instructive nature picture, giving specimens of the most primitive kinds of creatures. They are water animals, and also forms somewhat higher in the evolutionary scale. To classes in natural history, this film will be invaluable. It will give the average spectator something, but not so much as to the instructed.

A THRILLING RESCUE.

In the "Mysteries of Souls," the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company's three-reel film, the heroine takes a desperate chance to make one of the principal scenes startlingly realistic. She is precipitated into the water from a sinking dory and is in imminent danger of drowning when she is providentially rescued by one of the villains who seeks her death that he may levy blackmail on his partner. The scene is one of the most thrilling incidents ever filmed and is a feat in photography rarely attempted. The woman is seen to sink, far below the surface of the water, and then rise again to struggle and sink. Then the rescue comes. The man is an expert swimmer and reaches her just in time and strikes out for safety. The features of the actors can be recognized and every movement is plain and distinct. There is no deception practiced and no dummies used, and the effect is wonderful and can hardly be accredited to the limitations of the camera.

"THROUGH TRIALS TO VICTORY."

"Through Trials to Victory," the big three-reel subject to be distributed by the Great Northern Special Film Company, is a romantic drama having to do with the loves and disappointments of a beautiful and unsophisticated young woman. She yields to influences that are bad and her indiscretion causes her hours of anguish.

Scene from "Through Trials to Victory."

Mona, the daughter of kind and indulgent parents, is invited to visit friends in a country town. She is delighted and looks forward to the meeting with pleasure. Everything is new to her and she is in jubilant spirits. There is a company of soldiers quartered in the vicinity and their handsome uniforms have an attraction for the girl. Captain Platen, in command, is a gay young officer who delights in a conquest of women. He is older, much more experienced than Nona and when they meet the girl is genuinely impressed. To the officer the affair is of only passing moment as he finds time hanging heavily on his hands. They meet often and the officer makes violent love to the girl. Their meetings are secret and the girl enjoys it.

Mona has promised the captain a photograph of herself and he calls one night at an unseemly hour and is admitted into her apartments. The next morning the girl is filled with remorse at her rash act. She returns home and, on the eve of her arrival, meets Lieutenant Sedorf, a handsome and honest young officer. He rescues her from the insults of a rough character and for the second time Mona falls in love to intuitively know that she has met the one man in the world. Their love affair is open and with the sanction of her parents and the young couple are happy. They plan a home and all is expectation.

In an evil hour Lieutenant Sedorf visits his friend, Captain Platen, the former lover of Mona. In looking about the apartment of the captain, Sedorf discovers a picture of Mona and recognizes it instantly. Sedorf is livid with rage. He inquires as to how the photograph of his fiance came into the possession of his host. The captain shrugs his shoulders and tells him the original is only one of his many conquests. Sedorf is furious and striking his friend with a whip he carries rushes from the room.

In the meantime Mona is with the modistes who are preparing her wedding trousseau. She has just adjusted the bridal veil and is cavorting about the room when Sedorf enters. She goes to him with outstretched arms, but he repulses her angrily. He has the picture and he shows it to the girl and demands an explanation. She is speechless and he throws her from him. Finding tongue she then tries to explain, but he will not listen. She is an unclean thing and he casts her off with a fierce denunciation. The girl swoons and for many days hovers between life and death. When she recovers slightly her parents again send her to the friends in the country. One night she arises in her sleep and again enacts the scene with Lieutenant Platen on the night he came to her room. A friend, a minister, follows her and is a witness to the scene. His mind is relieved. Mona is more sinned against than sinning.

The minister goes to Lieutenant Sedorf and compels him to listen to his strange story. He tells it all and his listener is surprised and elated. Sedorf goes to Mona and humbly asks her forgiveness, which is freely given and they are once more happy. It is a story replete with situations out of the ordinary and will hold the attention of an audience closely.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

UNION'S NOTICE.—The following most excellent letter comes from the Business Agent of a local in the middle west. He does not forbid publication of name and location but prefers that I do not, presumably on account of the reference to certain local theaters, which might be recognized and cause unnecessary hard feelings. I respect his preference in this matter. The letter is certainly worthy of careful consideration, particularly the suggestion he makes as regards a new law. The letter reads:

"In the projection department of the March 16th issue you have an article with the title 'Wrong From Any and Every Point of View.' Yes, it is an outrage to keep any competent operator out of our organization—providing he is honest and reliable. The writer is a charter member of the local, whose letter head this is written on, and also holds a card in Local No. 67 of Des Moines, Ia., (Stage Hands) I. A. T. S. E. As a stage hand, I have no fault to find with the law in question. As it applies to the operator I believe a better law can and should be framed. When the I. A. T. S. E. admits an operator or stage hand to its ranks, his local is responsible for his ability, reliability and honesty. Hence, no one should be admitted to membership who can not be vouched for in accordance with that guarantee. There are some operators who can and do put up a mighty fine picture, but who cannot be trusted as far as you can throw a cow by the tail. They never stay on a job for any length of time. These same men, however, always have a pocket full of letters recommending them. Where or how they get them is a mystery. In the last year we have had a number of these 'drifters' apply for admission to this local. We were in need of operators at this time, too. They were told that they would have to live and work here for at least six months before we could accept them.

"I want to give you three cases to illustrate. Could furnish many more, but three will answer.

"1. Mr. A. J. M., age 24 years. Bright, clean cut. Very well posted on 'juice,' projection, etc. In fact he looked so good to me that I just cussed that six months' law. Got him a job. New house just about to open. He worked three weeks, had a fine picture, shows ran smooth. He managed to get a little over $50.00 of the proprietor's money above what was due him, and 'blew,' leaving a two weeks' board bill unpaid.

"2. A. M. Age 26. Good on 'juice.' Was a wonder on fixing rattle-trap machine. Had kit of tools. Said he wanted to make this city his home. Gave names of residents of his home town for references. Got 'em. Very satisfactory. Gave him the toughest job in town. He filled it and then some. Asked to have a better job. Got it for him. Did fine. Kept him busy doing repair work. Worked his six months. Got his card. Said he was offered a better job in his home town. Gave up his position to one of our local men and left. Three weeks later this local received a long telegram (collect) from Los Angeles, Cal., ordering us to wire Los Angeles to let him work there. He was warned not to infringe on any other local territory before he left.

"3. ——— ———. Age 23. Made application from P———, a small city in this state. His money was returned with a statement explaining the six months' residence law. Six weeks later we received an application from the operator of one of the non-union houses in this city. In this application he claimed to have ran the machine at this theater for seven months. I knew better. Writing and name seemed familiar. One of our operators said he knew of this man. The F——n Theater opened with a non-union operator. The applicant secured a job at this theater as janitor. Non-union operator was receiving $15 per week. This janitor-operator offered to run machine and do janitor work also for $12.00. Offer was accepted. Non-union operator was a friend of mine and told me about how he had to either meet this man's terms or be let out. He wanted to know if it would not be a good plan to "fix" the machine. I advised him against doing so. On the night he was to be let out I was returning my films and saw that this non-union friend was still running a show. Got out of street car and went up to his operating room to see that he did not tamper with the machine (a new 1912 Motiograph). I examined machine and ran last reel myself. Everything was in excellent shape and was left that way. I insisted that the boss be in the operating room when last reel was run so that there could be no question about everything being left ship shape. The $12 janitor held his job just four nights, when he was replaced by one of our union men. He, the union man, found the tension shoes bowed out like the old-fashioned tension springs should be and quite a hole worn in the tracks of aperture plate. This $12.00 janitor-operator then secured a position at the A——s Theater, one of a group of six theaters owned by a corporation. This corporation, or to be more exact, certain members of this corporation, have fought our union tooth and nail and have tried every method possible to force us to accept their cut-rate, country, or out of town operators. The manager of this A———s Theater claims that this janitor-operator has worked as operator at his theater for seven months, and that he is paying him the union scale (but can't state what the union scale is), and that unless we take him into the union his house will never employ our men. This janitor-operator has the poorest picture in captivity in our city. We have his first application and letters from P———, and have positive proof that this man has not been in our city for three months. Now, Friend Richardson, I think you will admit that the law in question has been a protection to the members of our local, and that there is some good in it.

"I believe a law something like this would be found practical. To allow locals to accept as members operators who secure their films personally at exchanges in the city where union is located. That is; near-by towns and suburbs to be included in the jurisdiction of the union. These men are just as well known to us as those that work in our city. To form an operators' protective association, state wide in its jurisdiction, where there is only one M. P. O. union in the state, and by districts where two or more unions exist in the state. Membership certificates to be granted by the local unions of the I. A. T. S. E., located in the state. This certificate to bear photo, with signature of the holder written partly on the photo and partly on the body of the certificate. The seal of the local to be so stamped on the certificate that parts of seal are on photo. Signature and body of certificate to have twelve squares where adhesive stamps can be placed, one for each month. Certificate to be void if it does not bear the stamp for the current month. These stamps also to be the receipt for dues. Each holder of certificate must pay dues one year in advance, but stamps to be sent from the union each month. District stewards to be appointed after six months have elapsed from the passage of this act. Their duties to investigate complaints, etc. Dishonest operators and managers to be reported by stewards to the state union, and the union to report such dishonesty to Exhibitors' League. The union to assume no responsibility until certificate bears six stamps. Certificate to be good only in state where issued.

"Inclosed you will find one of our contracts and wage schedule and working rules—which you will notice become a part of contract."

I will cheerfully admit, my Brother, that there is much in what you say, considering the present status of the profession of operating. I hold, however, that while it is at present expedient to very carefully examine every applicant, not only as to ability, but also as to what might be termed his moral qualifications, the six months law and the restriction of members to a certain territory is totally wrong in principle, from any and every point of view. I hold that, being possessed of the necessary ability, and means to prove it, it is my privilege, and the privilege of every other man, to go where he will, when he will, and earn his bread by following his chosen vocation in life; provided, always, that he does not undermine his brother by unfair competition in so doing. So far as I know, and I am sure it was the case a few years ago (I have been out of touch with the labor movement for a few years), no organization, with the single exception of the stage employees, forbade its members to go to any city and secure work, if he could, provided he conformed in every respect to local union requirements as to wages, etc. And I hold this to be right in principle. I was once a locomotive engineer. I spent years of apprenticeship as a fireman to attain that position. Now suppose I, through no fault of my own, were discharged. That meant absolutely that I must go to some other location and secure another position. Suppose the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers had said to me: "You must not infringe on the territory of another division (union)." Where would I have been "at"? The painters, carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers and so on make no such prohibitive law. Why should we? If there is real reason for it, well and good. It is information I am after, and I am by no manner of means the only one who would like to have that question answered. As the matter now lies, as I understand it, were I, myself (and I believe none will seriously question my ability), a member of the New York local, to go to your own city and get a position as operator, I would not be allowed under a strict interpretation of the I. A. T. S. E. laws to do so. Am I right? What the stage hands do is none of my business. I am not a stage hand. I am an operator, however, though not now twisting a crank (thank the Lord). I am deeply interested in building up a solid, effective operator's organization because it will be for the good of all concerned; the managers and exhibitors, as well as the men themselves. I am also deeply interested in seeing just and proper laws enacted. As the matter now lies I hold the working of the six months' law to be unjust, at the same time admitting the very evident fact that there is very much in what you say as to its value in one direction. I hold, however, that, while it is true that a man may prove to be a rascal, and may bring discredit to the organization, still he can be promptly expelled, and by a proper system of reports be kept out for all time thereafter, as well as practically forced out of the business. I have not the time at my disposal just now to give the law you propose careful study and consideration. However, on the surface it seems to fill the bill remarkably well. What I am after just now is precisely what you cover, viz: the widening of the jurisdiction of locals so that all territory will be covered, thus enabling any competent operator who can "prove up," to enter the organization. I thank you cordially for your excellent letter. I commend it to the careful consideration of all unions and invite comment thereon, making the letters as brief and concise as possible, and written on one side of the paper only, if you please.

CONDENSER BREAKAGE.—New York City writes: "Have a Powers 5 and latest model Standard. Have run the former a year and a half, and have used the same condenser lenses all that time. On the Standard one cracked the day I received the machine. Put another lens in and next day a slight crack started in the center of the lens. It kept spreading until it reached the edges. I took the lens I had used a year and a half out of the Powers and placed it in the Standard, placing new lens in the Powers. During the third reel the old lens 'busted.' On the Standard I always kept the condenser casing open, but this time opened it wider; also opened top of lamphouse a trifle. It did no good. Now why does this happen on one and not on the other?"

I'm sure I cannot tell you. I have had the same proposition sprung just the reverse—the complaint being against the Powers which broke lenses and a machine of another make did not. Suppose you try keeping the casing closed. Also try separating the lens from the metal with a thin strip of asbestos. Condenser breakage is a strange thing sometimes, as I have before said. You are in New York City I suppose. Why not go down to the office of the manufacturers of the Standard, 100 Beekman st., and submit the difficulty to them. They will, I am sure, do all they can to help you overcome the trouble. It is a rare, though not unknown, thing to have a lens start to crack in its center.

VOLTAGE AT ARC. Brooklyn, N. Y., asks: "On p. 965. March 16 issue, you say, in replying to Portland, Ore., that the rheostat cuts down voltage; also on preceding page you say arc voltage is from 45 to 51. If this is so will you kindly explain the following: (a) Running on D. C. from Mercury Arc Rectifier, with arc voltage around 50, I find it possible to maintain as long an arc as with 110 volts and rheostat. (b) On 550 volts, reduced with rheostat, I find it impossible to break the arc by separating the carbons as far as the lamp will allow. I trust that the instructions on the various machines, now being run in the Department, will be published in book form so that they may be kept in convenient form for reference."

Your problem is simple enough, Brooklyn. The D. C. projection arc may be operated at other voltage than that given, but it is only at from 45 to about 51, or maybe a trifle higher, that it gives satisfactory illumination for projection. The answer to the problem you submit is this: The resistance operates in such manner that the voltage is within the limits named when a certain number of amperes are flowing. When you separate the carbons a longer distance than ordinarily, you cause the arc to offer very much higher resistance within itself, thus reducing the amperage. The result is that the voltage of the arc is greatly increased. Now if the current be 550, by separating the carbons a great distance you do not break the arc because the voltage mounts and still forces the current across, but an ammeter would show very little current to be passing. If you had an ammeter in the line and a voltmeter across the arc, you would find that the voltmeter would climb and the ammeter drop. The reactance of the Mercury Arc Rectifier is in the nature of an auto transformer and I believe acts in such manner as to give the same effect as the rheostat under the conditions named within the limits of the line voltage. The instructions spoken of will be in book form, and will be a book that will make you all sit up and take notice when it is done, too.

LENS FAULT. New Orleans, La., writes: "My lenses seem to have a few white specks on them. Looks to me as though they were inside the glass. Tried cleaning with soft rag and alcohol without effect. Picture is clear and distinct, but not as sharp as it might be."

Presumably you mean the objective lens. Most likely the specks are due to some flaw in the glass. Certain optical glasses are subject to oxidization and deterioration because of the metals used in their composition. If the specks are inside the glass the only remedy is a new lens. It is, however, barely possible that they are between the two lenses of the front combination. These lenses are cemented together with balsam and this gum has been known to melt and run down between the lenses (see p. 70 of the handbook). This does not often happen to a moving picture lens, but it has been known to. Also it has been known to occur that little chips of the balsam would, in a very old lens, detach themselves and settle on the surface of the lenses between the two glasses. Don't let your picture suffer by reason of the expense involved in replacing a defective lens. It won't pay you to do that.

DOUBLE EDGE. Washington, D. C., writes: "Have gained considerable knowledge through the Department. Have a couple of questions to ask now. (1) In your opinion what is the best way to renew the mainshaft spindle on an Edison Type B? (2) What is cause of a double edge on left side of picture and how may it be remedied?"

Inasmuch as a shaft and a spindle are one and the same thing, or rather "spindle" is a term soemtimes used when speaking of a small shaft, I hardly know what you mean by a "main shaft spindle." Presumably it is the camshaft you have in mind. If so it may be removed by taking off the aperture plate and the cast bar which holds the crank gear and then slipping out the left hand camshaft bushing. Unless I am in erorr the shaft bearing the cam may then be lifted out. (2) You will have to describe the effect closer. Be sure, however, there is no faint fingermark, or spot of oil on the lens. Operators when asking such questions must remember that it is necessary to describe the effect in minute detail. I am many miles off, usually, and if you cannot locate the trouble when you are right there on the ground certainly I must have very complete data to do it at a distance.

NEW UNION. Danville, Ill., writes: "Find enclosed list of members of the moving picture machine operators' union, auxiliary to Local No. 156, I. A. T. S. E., of this city. The operators were organized Feb. 11 last, with a membership of eleven. Since the organization was formed projection has improved greatly. Both the public and the managers show appreciation when the operator runs his union slide. Any city with several houses, in which the operators are unorganized will do well to get busy and get a charter. Full information may be had by addressing Mr. Lee M. Hart, Chicago, care State Hotel, who is General Secretary-Treasurer of the I. A. T. S. E. We have one of the Moving Picture World Bibles and are studying hard to pass the first city examination, and secure a license. It may help some as it ought to keep the six-dollar-a-week crank turners out. The list of members is as follows: Pres., Harry C. Hughes; V. Pres., Bert Walters; Business Agent, Edw. Dinsmore, Sec.-Treas, Jas. Goff; Searg. at Arms, Ray McKinnie; Members: Roolins Bean, C. J. Cain, Kenneth Cliffton, W. G. Calvin, Geo. Hamer, Ercel Maiden, L. W. Phillips."

Success to the new organization. I am pleased indeed to know that projection has been improved through this medium of the union. You did not give particulars on the very important topic of how this was accomplished.

WHAT'S WRONG? La Grande, Ore., writes: "What is the matter with the Eclair American Company? In their release of Nov. 28 'Miss Masquerader,' they spell guess 'gess,' leaving out the letter 'u.' In their Dec. 12th release, 'The Musician's Daughter,' they spell girl 'glrl.' In this same film there is a typewritten letter which is so out of focus with the rest of the film that it cannot be read at all, as it is too short to allow of focusing up and still give time to read it. This same film showed sprocket holes continuously on the left side. The photography also was poor; not at all like the French Eclair subjects."

This matter is respectfully referred to the American Eclair people. I print this for the reason that many complaints have come in concerning this same thing. It is up to Eclair. As to the other matter of which you wrote I do not think I can be of assistance, I am sorry to say.

A DISCOVERY. There is constant and growing tendency to get away from the cheap, temporary and usually more or less gaudy theater front. The present movement is toward comparatively simple, dignified and solid decorative effect and that is as it should be. As has been pointed out time and again in these columns, the motion picture theater is here to stay. It is a fixture. It is becoming more and more deeply rooted in the affections of the amusement loving people as time goes on. It therefore follows that the cheap, temporary decorative schemes used in the past will give way in favor of solid permanency. Moving picture theaters are now being constructed, seating around 1,000, which will compare favorably in every way with the regular dramatic houses. In the near future motion picture houses seating 1,500 will probably be the rule. They will be handsome structures, too. Really desirable material from which to construct theater fronts is limited. The ordinary material commonly used for theater fronts, where decorative effects are sought, is mostly rather poor stuff. A material combining the effect of solidity and dignified decoration is what is needed and it seems to me that I have discovered that very thing. A few days since I happened into the office of a builder who is planning a row of houses. On a table were displayed samples of brick which immediately arrested my attention. They were surely beautiful. I learned that they were called "tapestry" brick. I at once saw, or thought I did, in those brick a splendid material for theater fronts. I secured the address of the manufacturers, the Fiske Company, New York City, and betook myself to their office to view the material in sample panels. The colors are light red, clear medium red, dark red, dark red with dark flashed edge, dark brownish blue, flashed edge with olive center, light brown, flashed edge, with copper center, cream gray, brownish gray of three shades, golden brown of three shades, light yellow, chamois, pinkish yellow, golden and dark golden.

The face of the brick, which are exceedingly hard burned, is very rough, giving a sort of rug-like effect. It seems to me that some truly beautiful theater front effects could be worked out with this magnificent material. There are now in this city, I learned, three theaters, one of them owned by Marcus Loew, constructed with these brick.

I want it to be distinctly understood that this is not a "write-up," in the accepted sense of that term. I simply discovered this material and tell my friends of it that they may investigate for themselves. Those seeking gaudy effects, which are invariably more or less tawdry, will not be at all interested in this material. Those seeking something dignified and beautiful will do well to look into tapestry brick closely.

EXCHANGE MOVES.—The New York Film Exchange, of which my good friend, Will J. Smith is manager, has moved to 115-117 Nassau street, occupying the offices which for so many years housed the Nicholas Power Company. I wish friend Smith success in his new location. He is square and does a square business, and that is what we want. He deals in all kinds of motion picture theater supplies, projection machines, etc.

HOME PROJECTOR.—On a recent trip to Orange I had the pleasure of being shown through the immense plant of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., plant, also of a short visit with Mr. Edison himself. Mr. Edison spoke enthusiastically of the progress he is making with the application of the phonograph to motion pictures. He made the assertion that within a comparatively short time, by the aid of his apparatus, grand opera, perfectly reproduced by pictures and phonograph, would be given in the smallest towns. Mr. Edison looks hale and hearty. He is at his laboratories on an average of eighteen hours a day.

While there I witnessed the projection of a picture on the miniature projection machine designed for home use. It is a marvelously perfect little mechanism, and a perfect projector. The film is a curiosity. It is seven-eighths of an inch wide and on it are three rows of pictures, reduced from the regular films. The first row is projected by running the machine in the regular way. The machine is then run backward for the center row of pictures and ahead again for the third row. The sprocket holes are between the rows; that is to say there is a row of pictures, a row of sprocket holes and then another row of pictures. The pictures are about seven-thirty-seconds of an inch in width and three-quarters that height. Eight running feet of this film is equivalent to 1,000 of the regular film. The design is to reproduce the regular films in miniature for home use after they have served their usefulness in the theaters. That is to say when their useful life in the theaters is done they will then be given over to the home machine. The Home projector certainly has a tremendous field. It will be marketed about April first.

EXPERIENCE NECESSARY. Washington, D. C., writes: "Have been studying projection for about five months with view to becoming an operator. On applying for license found that six months' experience as helper was necessary and that applicant for license as assistant must have a letter from his future employer, stating size of operating room, etc. Am acquainted with only one theater manager, and his operating room is too small for two men. Furthermore I am informed that the union men have resolved to help no one else to become operators. Therefore it is a pretty poor outlook for me. Can you suggest any plan?"

I am thoroughly in accord with the six months' apprenticeship. If I had my way it would be made a year. Suppose you proposed to become a locomotive engineer; would you expect to "study the business for about five months" and then apply for and receive a position as engineer? Would you ride on a road that employed such engineers? Would you employ a bricklayer to lay brick in the walls of a new home you were building who had merely "studied the business for about five months," and probably never actually laid a brick in his life? Would you employ an attorney or a doctor who had "studied the business for about five months"? No! Most emphatically you would not. But you expect to study operating for about five months—probably without doing any actual operating at all—and then inflict your rankly incompetent work on a long suffering audience. While I sympathize with you in one way I am most heartily in accord with the proposition of compelling would-be operators to serve an apprenticeship and learn practical projection, and learn it thoroughly too, before assuming charge of an operating room. I presume you will simply have to await an opportunity to get on as helper. Very likely the most feasible scheme would be to secure a position as usher with the understanding that you would be taken on as operator's helper as soon as practical. You must understand that in other trades and professions, some of them not nearly so difficult of mastery as operating, an apprenticeship of from one to five years is necessary. The day when "operating" means merely the ability to twist a crank is rapidly passing, and I am helping to make it pass by every means within my power. There now, I suppose you are good and mad at me, but the day will come, if you really become an operator, when you will realize and recognize the justice of my position.

SEVERAL QUESTIONS. New York City asks: "(1) How many amperes are we allowed to use in N. Y. City—25 or 45? (2) Is it right to protect a fifty-ampere meter with 50 A. fuses, or is it better to use 40 A. fuses when I only pull 25 to 30 at the arc? (3) Have a bottle of collodion. Can you tell me how much ether and film I should put in to make N. I. cement? (4) Have No. 6 wire from lamp and about half of it gets very hot. What can be the reason? No loose connection."

(1) You are allowed to pull 45 amperes, but that amperage must not be used without first making application to the Department for permission and having your installation approved for it. You must use link fuses for 45 amperes. (2) Fifty-ampere fuses will protect the meter and, assuming that you of course have a secondary set of operating fuses, which should not be more than 10 amperes in excess of your arc consumption, they are all right. If you have but the one set of fuses they should not be of greater capacity than 40 A. at most. This on the assumption that you use a rheostat. If it is A. C. and an economizer is used, that is something else again. Fifteen ampere fuses at the meter would probably be plenty large enough in that event. (3) It will hardly pay you to monkey with making cement just for your own use. (4) Most likely the wire is not up to standard in size and is quite old. Better get new lamp leads. It does not pay to use wires in that condition. Your manager should understand that those hot wires are wasting energy which is every bit registered on the meter, thus increasing light bills without getting the light in return. New leads probably would not reduce the bills but it would increase the light and not increase the bills.

WEAK CURRENT. Ravenna, Nebr., writes: "Enclosed find diagram of wiring used in my theater. I am having some trouble with light. My object is to keep the sign lamps bright all the time during the show. When I cut down to start the show the lights are very dim because I use only 35 volts for the arc. I have a 110 volt D. C. generator running at half speed, or 1900 r.p.m. This dynamo is pulled by 3 h.p. Fairbanks-Morse engine. The sign illumination consists of eighty-five 2 c.p. incandescent lamps. I use the three-wire system as shown by sketch. Please give me an idea as to how to wire the plant to keep the sign lights burning to c.p. all the time; also so that I can have more power, as I have not enough to run fans or electric piano. Kindly state size of wire necessary. The distance is 125 feet from dynamo to operating room."

It is quite plain that your knowledge of electricity is rather weak. You say you use 35 volts at the arc and I see that you have a rheostat in series with the lamp. You also say that you are running your dynamo half speed. You will have to speed that dynamo up to its normal rating and keep it running that way all the time, using sufficient resistance in series with the projection arc to reduce the arc voltage to 45 or 48. It may be necessary to install a larger engine, but this is the only way you can secure satisfactory results. I would advise the use of No. 6 wires from the dynamo to the projection arc, although if you are not using more than 25 Amperes you could get along with No. 8; but No. 6 would be better. You are not using a three-wire system. That would be an impossibility with one dynamo. The third or middle wire is simply the field lead which enables you, through the rheostat, to regulate your voltage. Be sure the commutator of your dynamo is kept clean and in good condition. You will find a number of articles dealing with that proposition in the last few issues of the Department. It would be possible to conserve your power to some extent by using the sign lamps as resistance for the projection arc instead of a rheostat. To do this, however, you would have to have about 20 volt lamps and the installation of that kind would be a job for a competent electrician, and no other.

SALT BRINE. N. C. (Name of town suppressed), writes: "You doubtless remember that in January 13th issue I inquired concerning the heating of my lamp leads. I took your advice and have remedied the matter to some extent by getting new wires of as good grade as could be procured. In the February 10th issue you told of your visit to L. U. 181 of Baltimore and spoke of Mr. Gregory's Salt Brine scheme. I noticed that Westfield, Mass., tried it with not very good results. Ever since that appeared in February 10th issue I have been experimenting with this proposition and to date I find that if they are soaked for a longer period than four days they burn without needling and give a much whiter light than when soaked but a few days; also they hardly make a sound when burning, thus doing away with the annoying sing of the carbons. I first started by soaking them 2 days, then 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16 and 20 days, but I find I get the best results by soaking them from 14 to 16 days. It seems to make the carbon softer. I would like to hear from others on this point. Now here is a question I would like you to answer, and I think a great many more of the operators and managers would like to hear it answered also. You hear so often statements to the effect that, 'The machine is anchored solid to the floor,' and my picture is 'nailed to the screen' or 'painted on the screen.' Now, friend Richardson, I have been in the operating game for the last eight years and to date I cannot say that my picture has been nailed to or painted on the screen; but I can say that every manager I ever worked for has made the assertion that I produced the best picture ever projected for them. Now what I would like to know is do these nailed-to-the-screen operators mean that their picture is nailed to the screen even after the mahcine is anchored to the floor? To date I have been unable to get a picture that does not move a little, though hardly enough for the audience to notice. I believe it is impossible to do this as the sprocket holes are imperfect and this will cause the picture to move a little, no matter what you may do to the machine. I have been around a little myself but that painted-to-the-screen proposition has not yet been presented to my gaze. In my letter in the January 13th issue I told of writing two letters to the Baltimore L. U. 181 and not receiving an answer. Since their explanation appeared in January 27th issue I have to date written Mr. Ewell two more letters containing two stamped addressed envelopes, but am sorry to say that I have no answer from either. I wonder what is the matter; I only seek information as to become a member."

The writer of this letter is the only man who to date has reported an exhaustive test of this Salt Brine proposition, and he seems to have discovered the secret. Those who try this should remember that Mr. Gregory said his brine was strong enough to support an egg. It seems the time of soaking given me was too short. It also seems that the scheme is of real genuine value. I have before intimated that I thought there was something in this, and I am glad to know that N. C. has solved the problem. I would like to have reports from others. I would not advise operators to soak a whole package of carbons; put ½ dozen in. Make the brine as directed, so that a fresh egg will float and soak the carbons 12 or 14 days, allowing them to dry thoroughly before testing. I should say that it would probably take a week for the carbons to get thoroughly and completely dry, though the process may be hastened by lying them in the sun. Probably they might dry out in a much less time, but in the beginning it is best to take no chances. Certainly friend Gregory had a phenomenal light for A. C.; much better than any I ever looked at, considering the low amperage he was using. Therefore it seems a positive fact that the soaking of the carbons contains some element of large value. As regards that nailed-to-the-screen proposition you are perfectly right. In a very few instances where a projection machine in perfect adjustment, with a perfect intermittent sprocket, was in use, running a new Pathe film or even the films of one or two other manufacturers having perfect perforations, I have in rare instances seen a film run for perhaps 100 feet without being able to see any movement whatever. This performance, however, is very rare indeed, and at this stage of the game it may be said that the moving picture which is perfectly steady throughout is not to be obtained, though with certain makes of films it is possible to approach the nailed-to-the-screen effect very closely. As regards the Baltimore letter affair; now that is up to Baltimore and I would suggest to my good friends and brothers of L. U. 181 that they slap brother Ewell on the wrist, because letters of this kind are certainly deserving of a reply even though it is impossible for the party to become a member owing to the six months' residence law.

GOOD POSITION. Tucson, Ariz., writes: "A year ago when I was Manager of the Automatic Theater in Los Angeles, Cal., I wrote you. I am now operator at The Clifton Theater, this city, and when I say operator I mean that I have an operator's position and not an all around handy man. We run two shows a night with a Sunday matinee, four reels of three to four weeks licensed films, no songs. Have a four-piece orchestra, admission ten and twenty cents, bucking one house with a ten cent straight admission and another at five, ten and fifteen cents. I took this position last June with a promise of a raise in one month if I made good, but before 24 hours was over I was informed that the raise would take effect immediately. Am fair at banner and picture work and for this I am paid extra. Don't know as it is any great feat, but I have just completed a four months' run without having to shut down during a reel. Use Power's No. 6 with a motor drive and a mercury arc rectifier, with a No. 5, and transformer for emergencies, which have not happened up to date. I carefully inspect every change before running same and overhaul the machine thoroughly once a month and sometimes oftener. Have yet to receive my first order or complaint from employer, who is a pioneer picture man of Arizona. This I think is because of the fact, that next to my wife and babe I love my work and spare no time or pains in endeavoring to project an A-1 picture."

The fact that you have run four months without a shut down is a high tribute to your painstaking care and to your ability as an operator. I have printed what appeared to be in the nature of a personal letter because it shows what can be done by one who is willing to expend energy and training in the accomplishment of perfect work. I like to get such letters as this, provided they are always backed up by performance as I have no doubt is the case with yourself.

NEW THEATER FOR GALVESTON, TEXAS.

A new theater to cost $35,000 is planned for Galveston. It will be erected by the Texas Amusement Company, Inc., of which E. H. Hulsey is president and A. L. Scudder is secretary. The new building will be three stories high with a frontage that the plans promise as geing the handsomest front in the city.

ALL PREVIOUS RECORDS BROKEN.

"Victim of the Mormons" Makes Unprecedented Record in Rochester. Booking Extended for Second Day.

The following telegram from the Feature Film Company of America to the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company explains itself and is proof positive that the film is all that has ever been claimed for it by the distributers:

Rochester, N. Y., March 18, 1912.

Great Northern Special Feature Film Company,
42 East 14th Street, New York.

"Victim of the Mormons" played Colonial Theater, Main Street, Rochester, to-day to record breaking business, smashing all previous records in receipts. Manager Wolfe extended booking for to-morrow. Film pleased large audiences from early morning until eleven P. M. Without doubt greatest box office attraction in moving pictures ever presented in this city. The Feature Film Co. of America.

MAJESTIC QUITS SALES COMPANY.

Elsewhere in this issue of The Moving Picture World will be found the announcement of the withdrawal of the Majestic Motion Picture Company from its alliance with the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company. The Majestic Company was not a member of the Sales Company organization, but by a special arrangement its product was distributed by the Sales Company, which required the payment of two cents per foot commission for the service. The owners of the Majestic Company have arrived at the conclusion that two cents a foot is more than they care to part with for the service of the Sales Company, and will hereafter go it alone. Their position and proposition to exchanges are stated explicitly in their advertisement, the most interesting feature of which is a practical reduction of their product to nine cents a foot. Just what the effect of this reduction in price will have upon the market remains to be seen. One thing certain is that the Majestic people have confidence in their product or they would not thus attempt to go into the open market.

LESSER BUYING FEATURE FILM.

Sol. L. Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange of San Francisco, California, is in New York for the purpose of buying feature film subjects, and is making his headquarters at the Hotel Astor. He will remain in the city for a week or ten days. While in New York Mr. Lesser placed an order with the Nicholas Power Company for fifty Power's No. 6 cameragraphs with all its new features. He is also selling agent for the Oriental Film Company.

SIMON WILL PLAY YOUR PICTURES.

Mr. Walter C. Simon, formerly with Lyman Howe playing the pictures, and who composed the special music for several of Kalem's feature pictures, will be at liberty after April 1st and desires to make a few special engagements to play pictures. It is Mr. Simon's intention to limit these engagements to two nights, it being his purpose to give a practical demonstration of the proper method of fitting piano music to the picture. He is one of the best in his line and his work is a feature in itself.

POWERS' MEXICAN BORDER FILM.

The Powers' Motion Picture Company's organization in New Mexico has secured a splendid picture of scenes on the Mexican border, showing the United States troops who are protecting Uncle Sam's interests in that troublesome locality. This film is already dated for release. The Powers people desire to announce to exhibitors that they are giving away handsome sepia-toned photographs, 9 x 11, of eight of their leading players. Any exhibitor may have them upon application and the payment of a nominal sum sufficient to cover the cost of mailing.

"ODYSSEY" STATE RIGHTS NEARLY ALL SOLD.

The Monopol Film Company announces that only a few minor rights for Homer's "Odyssey" remain unsold at the present writing. According to advices received from Monopol the press campaign was a regular whirlwind.

"Frank Winch was engaged to engineer the publicity promotion—that he did and did well. His advent into the film field was quickly followed by other prominent press agents, and more will follow.

PRAISES CHARLEROI THEATERS.

Factory Inspector J. C. Delaney, of Pennsylvania, recently paid a visit of inspection upon the picture theaters of Charleroi, Pa. As a result of his investigation of conditions in that city he wrote a letter complimenting in the highest terms the conditions existing in the Coyle and the Palace Theaters of that city. The Coyle is owned by Robert S. Coyle and the Palace by R. L. Barnhart.

IMP HAS A NEILSEN PICTURE.

The Imp Films Company announces that it has secured a picture entitled "Woman Always Pays," a 2,000-foot subject in which Miss Asta Nielsen plays the leading part. This picture will be released by the Imp Films Company on Thursday, April 18th.

CHANGE DATE OF GREAT NOTHERN RELEASE.

Ingvald C. Oes, of the Great Northern Film Company, announces that the Great Northern feature film entitled "A Dream of Death," advertised for release on Saturday, March 30, will not be released until Saturday, April 27. The change, Mr. Oes explained, is due to delay in the work of production.

MISS LEAH BAIRD.

Miss Leah Baird, although one of the Vitagraph's most recent acquisitions, has already become one of the most popular of photoplayers. She is a young lady of great beauty, both of face and form, added to which is a most pleasing personality. Her success before the camera is unusual for one who so lately has come from the speaking stage.

Miss Baird has been a photoplayer only since last November. Her first appearance in moving pictures was in a comedy which also marked the first appearance of Marshall P. Wilder for the Vitagraph Company, the comedy being entitled "Chumps." Her work from the start was well up to the standard and it has improved ever since. It was not a difficult task for her to make the transition from footlights to moving pictures. Miss Baird is a little above the average in height and is well suited to the work of playing leads in drama or comedy.

Previous to her debut in picturedom, Miss Baird had an experience of five seasons on the dramatic stage. Two years of that time was spent with "The Gentleman from Mississippi." Later she appeared in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird." For this work she was well prepared by several seasons in stock work in Toronto, Buffalo, Wilmington, Del., and Troy, N. Y. Miss Baird is a Chicago girl, in which city she is well known socially. After having tried both the legitimate and the pictures, Miss Baird is all for the pictures and declares her intention of sticking to picture work just as long as she can.

"THE CHINESE REVOLUTION" PICTURES.

Several pieces of film from the Oriental Film Company's picture, "The Chinese Revolution," have been received by the Moving Picture World. The photography seems clear and the scenes shown incline us to the belief that the picture is interesting. The manager of the company writes that one insertion of his advertisement in the Moving Picture World brought a flood of inquiries and he is sanguine of being able to dispose of all State rights at a very early date.

There is no question but that a picture such as described will arouse great interest as the subject is a live one that is receiving much attention from the newspapers. While we have been reading of battles and bombardments, but little of a pictorial nature has come along up to the present writing. There ought to be some easy money for State rights men on this picture.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"LONESOME ROBERT" (Essanay).

The high standard of splendid, virile dramatic subjects maintained by the Essanay Company is well known to exhibitors throughout the entire photoplay world, and the excellence of their productions is being commented on widely by discriminating showmen who know the value of first-class subjects and desire to give their patrons the best on the market.

In "Lonesome Robert," a splendid dramatic offering soon to be released, the Essanay Company have constructed a simple yet powerful plot that lends itself charmingly to film adaptation.

Robert Woods is a cripple. His father is a policeman. Tom Norris passes the window of Robert's home every day and they become great friends. Tom is the wireless operator in the employ of Mr. Harding, who owns a great manufacturing plant nearby. Each day Tom visits Robert and finally teaches him the mysteries of wireless telegraphy, installing an outfit in the boy's home which connects with the instrument at the plant, and the two exchange messages whenever opportunity offers until little Robert becomes quite proficient.

Scene from "Lonesome Robert" (Essanay).

Finally, one night Tom is asked to remain at the office to guard a large amount of money in the safe. Two ruffians see the money put away and hang around watching for a chance to steal it. During the night they attack Tom and bind him to the table upon which the wireless apparatus rests and then proceed to break into the safe. Tom manages to flash a message which is received by little Robert. The boy is awakened by the sputtering of the instrument and calls his parents to tell them what it says. Robert's policeman father gets into his uniform and summoning other officers succeeds in arresting the robbers before they are able to get away with the money.

Francis K. Bushman splendidly portrays Tom Morris, Thomas Shirley is cleverly effective and well nigh perfect in the role of "Lonesome Robert," Frank Dayton and Helen Dunbar are well cast as Robert's parents, Harry Cashman is distinguished as the capitalist and the two crooks are played by Bryant Washburn and Mr. Carrol. The picture is booked for release April 12th.

"ACROSS THE SIERRAS" (Nestor).

A pretty Western drama in which friendship, love, morality and kindness combine with positive success to overcome the evils of neglect, carelessness and jealousy, which have been fostered and allowed to thrive in the person of Dan Harding through his weakness for the cup that drives men of even greater and stronger personal qualities to the brink of, if not into, the abyss of destruction.

Harding, a miner with profitable employment, is blessed with the possession of a loving wife and a sweet girl child, who is strongly attached to John Webster, a young friend of her father's. Her childish innocence and simplicity have drawn him toward her also. After many pleadings, Harding promises his wife to give up his friends of the barroom and cast aside and overcome his desire for liquor; but on pay-day his promise is forgotten and he again drops into the gilded saloon, where among his so-called friends his week's earnings are soon spent. At home, wife and little Elma are anxiously awaiting father's homecoming. John comes by on his way to his lodgings. To save their feelings, he tells them that Dan is working late at the mine and pretends to go on his way. In the saloon he finds Dan empty of pocket, but not of liquor. He coaxes him to his shack, where the stupefied man soon falls asleep. John slips his own money into Dan's envelope and takes it to Mrs. Harding, saying that Dan is still working and would not be home for a few hours. The child insists upon Webster remaining for supper, and afterwards climbs into his lap for a story or childish prattle. Thus they are overtaken by drowsiness.

Scene from "Across the Sierras" (Nestor).

Meanwhile, Dan partly recovers from the effects of drink and staggers home. The sight of John and Elma asleep in the chair and his wife sewing nearby, quickens the man's wits. Believing that his wife and his friend love one another, he stealthily leaves the house to return no more.

Twelve years elapse, Mrs. Harding and Elma, now grown into womanhood, have moved to a new home across the Sierras. Mrs. Harding's needle has been their chief support, and John, having found work at the Dexter Mine, follows them. Friendship for the child has developed into love for the young woman and an engagement is at hand.

Dan Harding, struck with remorse, has swerved from his evil ways and prospered, now being owner of the Dexter Mine. Arriving to arrange the settlement of a strike, he meets John, learns the truth, is happily re-united with his family and blessings are upon the heads of Elma and John.

This is indeed a most interesting and finely acted pictureplay, all the participants giving ample evidence of talent, training and thorough knowledge of what makes for perfection in pictures. George Gebhart, as Dan Harding, and Jack Conway, as John Webster, play their parts in a manner that is deserving of great praise. Eugenia Forde, as Mrs. Harding, Little Elma and Betty Keller, as the grown-up girl, are also very good. Nestor is to be congratulated on the class and character of its plays and players. Released March 27th.

"THE SOCIAL SECRETARY" (Lubin).

A dainty love story, just a bit removed from the usual thing in that line, is soon to be released by the Lubin Company under the title of "The Social Secretary." Laura Tryon is a young widow with a small boy named Brooks. She has found it very hard to make a living writing stories for the magazines and accepts the position of social secretary to Beatrice Wallington, a society favorite. Miss Wallington is engaged to be married to Kempton Greene, a society man, but neither seem to be greatly in love. The match is considered an excellent one on both sides and the engaged couple are very attentive to each other.

Greene is a frequent visitor upon Miss Wallington, of course, and is attracted by the pretty and intelligent secretary; in fact, he really falls in love with her and tells her so. Although the little secretary is willing to respond, she decides that it would not be loyal to do so and, frightened by the circumstance, decides to quit her position and run away rather than cause trouble. Returning to her former humble lodging, Laura attempts to take up magazine writing again, but finds that she has lost many of her former patrons and that her success is consequently less than before.

Scene from "The Social Secretary" (Lubin).

Soon after the disappearance of the secretary, Beatrice Wallington falls in love with a young duke and begs Greene to release her from the engagement. He does so willingly and then starts out to locate the little widow, but without success.

Meanwhile the little widow is having a desperate time to earn a living. Though very young, her little boy Brooks comprehends the situation and decides to get a job and make some money for his mother. He makes a brave attempt, but is not successful until he happens into the office of Kempton Greene. Though Greene was a very busy man, the smallness of the applicant for a position compelled his attention and after a few inquiries, he learns the name of the little fellow's mother. That was sufficient for Greene and in a moment he was away in quest of the little widow for whom he had searched so long. He arrived at a dilapidated tenement just as the landlord came down the stairs growling about the poor people who could not pay their rent. Greene follows Brooks into the room and in a moment the little widow was folded in the protecting arms of the man she could love and who would give little Brooks a job.

"A QUESTION OF EVIDENCE" (Reliance).

As a picture without a love episode, this subject should be welcomed by various individuals who have declared themselves against love pictures as a steady diet. Being a picture without women, it is of course a man's picture and being a man's picture one may readily guess that it is a war picture.

The story was written by Mr. J. Russell O'Leary and deals with the rough life of a lumber camp. In idle moments the men are inclined to rough play, which sometimes leads to blows. The opening scene shows a quarrel on this account in which one of the jesters is knocked down by a big lumberman. The others witness the affair and to them it is more or less of a joke. Very soon afterward the two parties to the quarrel shake hands and agree to forget the matter. Apparently they are soon as good friends as ever and together they set forth on a hunting and fishing expedition, having one rod and one gun between them. The young fellow who had been knocked down by the other rambled off with the gun while the other remained fishing at the shore. The gun was accidently discharged in the hands of the young lumberman and he received a fatal wound. Passing nearby at the time was a poverty-stricken woodsman who became frightened at the accidental tragedy and ran home, possessed of the idea that he would surely be accused of the murder if found thereabouts. This poor fellow was burdened with the care of a sick wife for whom he was not able to provide food or medical attention.

Scene from "A Question of Evidence" (Reliance).

Naturally suspicion turned toward the lumberman who had struck down the deceased a few days before. No one had heard of their reconciliation and the circumstances of the case made it appear as though it were a case of spite or revenge. He was taken into custody by the sheriff and things looked bad for him. Meanwhile his father had offered a reward of $500 for the murderer, firm in the belief that his son was not guilty. The poor woodsman, seeing in this an opportunity to provide the necessaries his wife required, went to the prisoner's father and declared himself to be the guilty man and requested that the $500 reward be turned over to his wife. In other words, he gave himself up. He did this none too soon, for the rough, angry lumbermen had already broken open the jail and were preparing to lynch the prisoner. Everything came out O. K. in the end, for it was not long before the men discovered the real motive of the poor woodsman and saw to it that he was given assistance, because the delay he caused was the means of saving the life of an innocent man. There are some excellent glimpses of shore scenery in the picture, one or two of which measure up to the highest artistic standard.

HUTCHINSON BACK IN CHICAGO.

Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago last week after a three-week sojourn in sunny Florida. Mr. Hutchinson spent his time at St. Petersburg, Fla., where he found an abundance of good fishing, boating and bathing.

A PHOTOPLAY BUREAU.

Sam Marks has opened a photoplay bureau in connection with Len Spencer's Lyceum at 46 East 14th Street, New York, for the purpose of booking actors and actresses for motion picture productions and for handling photoplays.

"THE COWARD" (American).

Here is a Western picture by the American Company that has for its motif the apparent physical cowardice of its principal character. Jack Walton, as he is named in the story, has no liking for the manly art of self-defense and his companions on the ranch make great sport of him and brand him as a coward because he will not fight. Finally, when tormented beyond endurance by a Mexican, Jack's feelings break all restraint and he kills his tormentor with a shot from his revolver. This is clearly against the rules of the game and he becomes at once a fugitive from justice. Taking refuge in the mountains, Jack successfully evades the sheriff and his posse until he is driven out by hunger. He manages to get by the posse and enters a house where he compels the mistress to provide him with food. While in the house he discovers that the woman's child is ill and in need of a doctor; he volunteers to summon one and starts on his errand of mercy when he is severely wounded by one of his pursuers. Jack manages to escape and forgetting his own wound, sends the doctor to attend the child of the woman who fed him. The child proves to be that of the sheriff who is pursuing Jack, so, when that officer gets a message from the fugitive reading: "If you still think me a coward, come to Sage Ridge and see," he finds it convenient to forget about the fugitive.

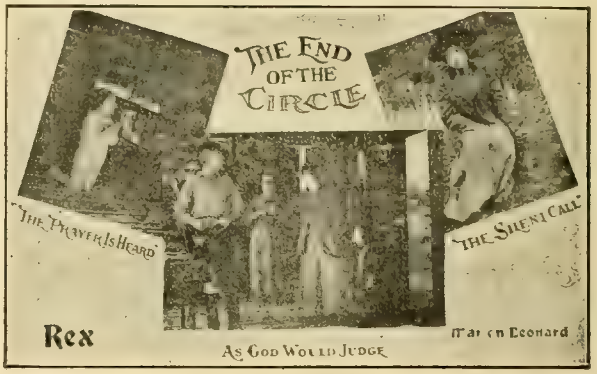
GERKE—ARNSTOOS.

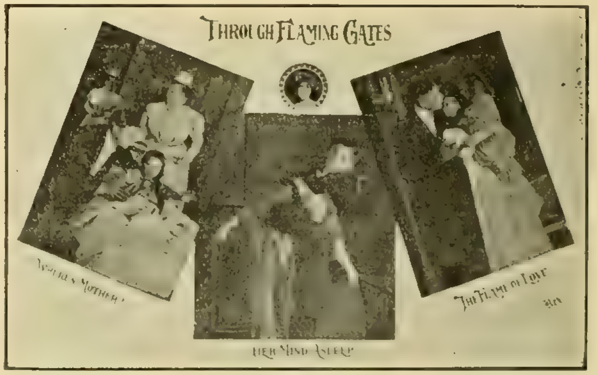
Charles Gerke, foreman of the Thanhouser Company printing room since the inception of that concern, was quietly wed February 10 to Miss Anita Arnstoos, of New Rochelle. Mr. Gerke, while still a young man, has seen many years of service in the film manufacturing business, beginning with Lubin in Philadelphia.

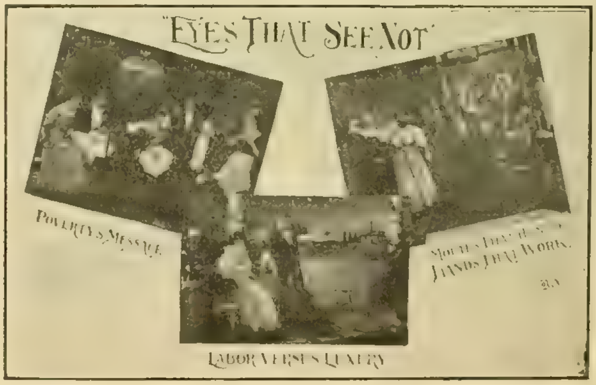
REX POST CARD REMINDERS.

The Rex Reminder is an innovation that has been adopted by the Rex Motion Picture Masterpiece Company, of New York. It is in the form of a souvenir post card. With each new Rex release there will be mailed to exhibitors everywhere one of these cards announcing the new production. This plan will be followed in order to keep the exhibitor posted as to just what is being done by the Rex Company, and in the event that any of their announcements of releases should have escaped the exhibitor's eye through any of the usual channels of publicity.

These cards represent a considerable expenditure both of time and money, with the result that they are really artistic and worthy of more than passing notice. Each card contains on an average of three scenes from every new picture, and each picture will have a card of its own. The cards are nicely glazed and feel good in the hand, much the same as an expensive playing card. Some of the cards will also be sent to the independent exchanges. Exhibitors who have a mailing list, and follow the custom of keeping their patrons advised, by mail, of the good things they are going to have, would do well to write the Rex Company, who will be glad to supply these cards in quantity to such theaters, at a nominal sum to cover the mere cost.







"SONS OF THE NORTH WOODS" (Selig).

Who of us, at some time or other, have not felt the lure of the great Canadian Northwest? How eagerly we peruse the writings of London, Servace, Connor, White, and others, whose clever pens paint for us pictures of the rough, hardy types of men, and women occasionally, who work, live, laugh, play, toil and love up in that great wilderness—the Canadian Northwest. In "Sons of the North Woods," the Selig Polyscope Co.'s release of March 25th, we are given an accurate, true-to-life portrayal of a romantic incident in the lives of an isolated group of these danger daring, big hearted though rough, people of the last great west.

Babtiste (Charles Clary), a jovial, hardy, lighthearted young woodsman, kisses his sweetheart Janie good-bye, and with his loaded sled and dog team starts north on a trading trip. At about the same time Hank Peters, a drunken trader from the north settlement, starts south with a good supply of liquor and his loaded sled. He carries with him a note to Janie MacKisson (Kathlyn Williams), whom he has never met, from the proprietor of the northern trading post. He indulges quite freely in the whisky and its influence is marked when he meets Babtiste coming north. The drunken braggart tells Babtiste that he is going south to make love to Janie. Babtiste tries to stop him, but Hank starts on his way south. Babtiste considers the proposition for a moment, then turns his own dogs south again. In the meantime Janie's father discovers an Indian trapper in the nearby woods suffering from a broken leg. He brings the Indian to his shack and, with Janie's aid, doctors the broken limb. Babtiste and Hank are now engaged in an exciting race over the snow trail to see who will reach the MacKisson cabin first. Babtiste's dogs bolt after a rabbit, and Hank forges ahead. When he arrives at the cabin Janie and Indian Jim are the only ones there. Hank, drunk with joy at his victory, as well as with liquor, tries to embrace Janie. The Indian comes to her aid, however, and at the point of a gun drives Hank out into the snow. Babtiste later finds Hank almost frozen in the snow, where he has fallen, and returns good for evil by saving his life.

Scene from "Sons of the North Woods" (Selig).

KERRIGAN HAS A BAD FALL.

Warren Kerrigan, that popular star of the American Film Manufacturing Company, suffered a bad fall while acting an Indian part in a coming American release entitled "Indian Jealousy." This picture is notable for some beautiful backgrounds in a nest of heavy boulders near La Mesa, Cal. The scenario called for a thrilling fall down the side of one of these giant boulders. Kerrigan, attired in Indian costume, refused to rehearse the actual fall, but promised to do his best when the camera began clicking. Mounting the rock, which is a trifle over fifty feet high, closely pursued by a posse, Kerrigan threw up his arms and allowed himself to fall backward. His body hurtled downward with tremendous speed, striking rocks and brush on its way. The brush assisted in breaking the fall, but did not prevent Kerrigan the pain of a much bruised body and slightly sprained arm. The part called for much heroism and Kerrigan is to be congratulated on his more or less lucky escape.

"SQUNK CITY FIRE COMPANY" (Imp).

Squnk City did not have a fire brigade, so in solemn meeting the chief men of that famous center of light and leading determined to remedy that condition. All the public spirited citizens got together one night, resolved to form a company and opened a subscription list, which was liberally patronized.

There they fell to appointing each other to offices and when this part of the business was completed the purchase of the engine was made.

For a long time Squnk City was without a fire, but one night the alarm bell rang and the officers got together in their paraphernalia around the sacred engine. But these wise men had forgotten one essential. They had voted each other into their respective high offices, but they had omitted to define their respective duties. So the occupants of the threatened house felt themselves in great danger, whilst the mmbers of the fire company debated amongst themselves as to whose duty it was to start the work of extinction. In the end somebody got to work, and the somebody was a fireman, who in putting out the fire won himself a wife.

Scene from "Squnk City Fire Company" (Imp).

This comedy, which is full of side-splitting humor, won a prize in the Imp Films Company's recent competition. March 30 is the release date.

HUDSON THEATER INSTALLS HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.

The Hudson Theater, Hudson, N. Y., have just purchased from Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," one of his 40 to 50 ampere, A.C. to D.C. economizers. Mr. Hallberg is also shipping one of his 110 volt D.C. economizers to Sherman, Texas. One Powers No. 6 moving picture machine was shipped to Lawler Bros., Greenfield, Mass. One Powers No. 6 to Wm. H. Beadle, Washington, D. C., and one No. 1A Motiograph to M. S. Millner, Grand Theater, Corning, N. Y.

THEATER CHANGES HANDS.

The Crystal Theater on Pine Street, Burlington, Wis., recently changed hands, C. W. Tiede selling out to H. C. Hansen and Martin Prailes, both of this city. It will be the policy of the present owners to give Burlington up-to-date shows, changing shows each Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday night, with a change of vaudeville each Saturday and Sunday night.

JULIA R. HURLEY—45 YEARS AN ACTRESS.

Mrs. Julia R. Hurley is celebrating her 45th year on the stage and is justly entitled to be called "The Grand Old Woman of the Stage." She began her career in Chicago at Col. Wood's Museum in the role of Little Mary, in "Waiting for the Verdict." One of the original "Oliver Twists," she has played with most of the old Broadway stars as well as the later ones. She was for seven years at Niblo's Garden, and was rehearsing with James Fiske's company when that gentleman was assassinated. She was also in the famous Brooklyn fire, playing with Kate Claxton in the "Two Orphans," and has had experience in almost every branch of the theatrical business. Lately she has been making a wonderful success, playing character parts with the different moving picture companies, and is at present one of the prominent members of the Reliance Company.

"Mother," the Reliance release of April 6th, will, in many respects, be a noted production. It is a strong dramatic story of a son's ingratitude and a mother's sacrifice, and an abundance of heart interest carries the spectator through many big dramatic scenes back to the pathetic little mother who cannot think ill of her son, no matter what his treatment of her. Mrs. Julia R. Hurley is featured in the role of "Mother," and her characterization is one of the exceptional features of the production.

FRANK WINCH RESIGNS FROM CIRCUS.

Frank Winch, one of the best known press agents in the country, has resigned from the Barnum and Bailey Circus, which opened this week at Madison Square Garden. Early last fall Mr. Winch, who was the general press representative of the Buffalo Bill Show, was engaged by John Ringling for the Barnum and Bailey Circus this season. The week that Mr. Winch was to have commenced his duties with the circus he resigned, owing to business matters that will require his presence in New York City for some time to come. Two years ago he broke into the publicity game in New York. The record he established then with Buffalo Bill and subsequently maintained for two years on the road was phenomenal. Winch has the faculty of getting stuff by the editor in pages.

SIDNEY AYRES WITH NESTOR.

Sidney Ayres, the well-known actor and long identified with Selig, is now scintillating in Nestor motion picture plays. The first Nestor release featuring Mr. Ayres will be announced in the very near future. What a matchless combination Nestor photography and Ayres' acting will make!

LAST CALL FOR OHIO CONVENTION.

President M. A. Neff, in behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, extends a hearty invitation to all motion picture exhibitors to come to Dayton, Ohio, on March 26th and 27th. Great preparations have been made for this convention and it is anticipated that there will be present exhibitors from all over the United States and Canada. Although this is but a state meeting, it bids fair to assume the proportions of a national convention, for hundreds of exhibitors, not members of the State League, have already signified their intentions to be present. Special arrangements have been made for the entertainment of visitors and the ladies, especially, will be taken care of. There will be something doing all the time. You can arrange to spend a few days' vacation to advantage by going to the Dayton meeting.

GEORGIA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A meeting of exhibitors of the State of Georgia was held at Cordele, Georgia, on February 21, and an association was formed to be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Georgia. Mr. F. Whire, of Albany, Ga., was elected president, and A. J. Woods, of Brunswick, Ga., secretary and treasurer. The question of better service was one of the chief objects of the meeting. Another important subject of discussion was the exorbitant and unreasonable special state tax, which is levied on every motion picture show in Georgia. The rate of $10 per month is considered outrageous and the association hopes to be able to secure a reduction. It is the intention to urge this measure before the next session of the Georgia legislature.

McINTYRE AND KERR JOIN HANDS.

James L. McIntyre, formerly of the Nestor Moving Picture Co., and other firms in the trade, has formed a partnership with Mr. J. Willard Kerr, who is well known in the real estate business. The new combination will be known as McIntyre & Kerr, with offices at 147 4th Ave., New York. They will cover a field which has not yet been covered in the motion picture trade. In effect they will be resident buyers, purchasing for out-of-town people, any and everything in the cinematographic line, such as film, machines, supplies, and general equipment. It is not their intention to carry a stock of material, but to occupy their full time in investigating anything pertaining to the trade that is advertised or mentioned, and to report favorably or unfavorably thereon as the case may be, in return for a nominal commission.

HAL REID JOINS RELIANCE.

On March 30, Mr. Hal Reid, who has for some time been Scenario Editor and producer with the Vitagraph Co., will join the Reliance Motion Picture Co., of New York, in the capacity of producer. Mr. Reid has had a long and varied experience in theatrical business. For years he toured America with that famous play from his own pen, entitled "Human Hearts." He wrote a number of other stage plays before engaging in moving picture work. For the Vitagraph he wrote many successful photoplays. One of the best of them is a picture called "The Seventh Son," soon to be released by the Vitagraph Co. "The Seventh Son" is reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

CHANGES AT FOND DU LAC, WIS.

J. A. Prinsen and E. C. Prinsen, who have been conducting the Royal Theater in Fond du Lac, Wis., for some time past, have purchased the interests of D. C. Sargent and A. N. Merritt in the Idea Amusement Company and the Fond du Lac Orpheum Company, thereby securing control of the Idea and the Henry Boyle theaters. The theaters are now in the control of the new managers.

A. N. Merritt has been secured by the new company to continue managing the Henry Boyle Theater for the remainder of the season. E. C. Prinsen, who has been managing the Royal Theater, will manage the Idea. The Royal Theater will be continued as in the past.

WOLCOTT COOMBS, DEAF-BLIND MARVEL IN SELIG FILM.

On April 5th the Selig Polyscope Co. will release one of the most interesting educational subjects of recent years. The first half of the split reel shows Wolcott Coombs, the seventeen-year-old blind and deaf boy, who in three years, under the instruction of Harry L. Virden, has accomplished more than most sighted boys do in twice that length of time. The scenes show a partial list of his accomplishments, such as expert hammock weaving, caneing chairs, reading and writing in the various systems for the blind, using the typewriter, etc.

In this country there is no school for the deaf blind and very few of those thus afflicted have the proper equipment with which to study. Three years ago, Harry L. Virden, then principal of the Oklahoma School for the Blind, became interested in young Coombs, who was attending the institution. Without hope of remuneration, Mr. Virden resolved then and there to devote his entire time to perfecting this boy's education and practical training. The film shows the result of his efforts, which are being watched with more than usual interest by educators and psychologists throughout the country.

Young Coombs is as ambitious as he is interesting, and is now preparing to enter college where he will be taught history, languages, economics, etc., under the direction and tutelage of his friend and teacher, Harry L. Virden. Later on Coombs hopes to establish a shop where he may direct other sightless boys in the practical arts. But the greatest and most praiseworthy of all his ambitions is the hope that some day he may be instrumental in establishing a school for the deaf blind in this country, where others in his condition may secure the educational advantages that he has enjoyed.

The other portion of this excellent split reel will be entitled "With the Boys of the Figure Two," and will show many thrilling and gripping scenes of the life, sports, and pastimes of cowboys on the West's largest horse ranch.

PICTURE FOLKS IN HOTEL FIRE.

The Mountain View Inn, an enchanting hotel in beautiful Hollywood, Cal., not far from the studios of the Nestor Film Co., was completely destroyed by fire Thursday, March 14. Among the many guests who had thrilling escapes from death were Mr. and Mrs. David Horsley and their little son, "Buckeroo" Stanley; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ricketts, Mr. and Mrs. Milton H. Fahrney, and the various leading members of the Nestor stock companies. At least twenty lives were saved, due wholly to the prompt and fearless work of Alfred E. Christie, who, together with Messrs. Tenbrook, Maloney, Murphy, Woods, Brierly, Edwards, Harris and Horace Davey, all Nestorians, rushed to the ill-fated hotel and, disregarding danger, fought the fiercely raging flames with exemplary heroism and stopped only when there was no one else and nothing else to save. Mr. Horsley wires that he had no idea the Nestor Co. possessed so many true-blue heroes.

Messrs. Pritchard and Moraine, camera-men, took some long chances in order to take a number of excellent pictures of the fire, the havoc, the fighters, the rescuers, et al. About two hundred feet of this sensational picture will shortly be seen on the screen.

THIS MAY NOT BE AS BAD AS IT SOUNDS.

The Third Kentucky Regiment Band has leased Holland's Opera House at Hopkinsville, Ky., and will conduct a moving picture show during the coming summer. The proceeds will go to purchase new instruments and uniforms.

MR. L. R. THOMAS.

Mr. Thomas was recently elected secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of West Virginia. He is an exhibitor at Moundsville, W. Va. Mr. Thomas attended the Dayton, Ohio, convention.

"AN EXCLUSIVE REP."

Once more the Republic Film Co. have taken steps to put over what, at this distance, looks like a "good one." Beginning Monday, March 18th, the Cattle Raisers' Association held a big convention in Fort Worth, Texas, at which there were present ten thousand cattle men and cowboys, and fifteen million dollars worth of prize cattle for which there are six thousand entries. This association represents two hundred million dollars.

The Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce and newspapers arranged affairs to show people in other parts of the world how Texas does things on the same comparative scale as her size is to the other states in the Union. Push ball on horseback was one of the great diversions, and will certainly make a most interesting piece of film.

The largest mule market in the world is located in Fort Worth and also the largest fireproof stock yards. Word comes from Fort Worth that the Chamber of Commerce got up a big comedy, entitled "The Roundup," which was enacted by one hundred of its members, just to have a good time and give the Rep camera man a chance.

In contemplating that one will sooner or later see a moving picture film of events of this kind, the regret that, through lack of time or money, we cannot travel from place to place and view these in person, is very much lessened.

George Kleine announces that he will release early in May a magnificent Cines film production entitled "Josephine." It is to be about 1,100 feet in length, and will be an epoch maker in gorgeous settings and powerful acting among one-reel feature subjects.

"THE TANKVILLE CONSTABLE" (Imp).

The Tankville constable applied the literal letter of the local law to over-speeders. The limit was 10 miles. Of course, he had his hands busy. Unfortunately he tries to stop the local Judge, and the local Judge makes a detour, and comes to grief in his car, being thereby much injured.

Now, the Tankville constable dreams a dream: He dreams that he is arrested and sent to jail for the offense of which he is guilty, and in his dream he goes through a series of very harrowing, and, from the spectators point of view, very amusing experiences. He is chased, and electrocuted and maltreated in a variety of other ways. Finally the Tankville constable wakes up and he is so impressed with the absurdly impracticable speed law that he ostentatiously changes the 10 on the board to 100, thereby assuring himself from further trouble of stopping local magnates in their rides.

This comedy gives rise to a bewildering series of diverting situations. It is well acted by the members of the Imp Calfornian Company. It will be released March 23.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Indiana Union Traction Company is preparing to build the largest motion picture theater in this part of the country. It will be located at Broad Ripple Park, north of this city, and will seat three thousand persons. The building will be about 80 by 160 feet, will be of frame construction and will cost about $8,000. It is expected that work on the structure will start early in the spring.

The Colonial was built for a vaudeville theater some years ago and is owned by M. Marks of New York City, who conducts the Kinemacolor Theater in that city. Mayor Shank, if he assumes the management of the local theater, contemplates putting on a line of high-grade colored motion pictures for an admission fee of approximately $1.

With an authorized capitalization of $7,500, the Franklin Amusement Co. of Evansville, has been organized to operate motion picture theaters. Those interested in the company are: J. R. Brannen, Philip Fine and Harry Kornblum.

So successful has the Vista Theater been during the few months of its existence, that H. T. Harrell, the owner, is preparing to build a $5,000 addition. The theater, which shows motion pictures exclusively, is located in the residence district and was built at a cost of $15,000.

A new film exchange has been established here by the Exhibitors' Service Company, which has been organized and incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $10,000. Directors and incorporators of the company are: W. H. Cleveland, Glen Thompson and Glen O. Dixon.

Hattie J. Church, who has conducted a motion picture theater at Terre Haute for some time, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the federal court in this city. She states that her liabilities are $12,207.76 and her asets $7,385.

H. T. Harrell, owner of the Vista motion picture theater, has notified Mayor Shank he will head a subscription list with a contribution of $1,000 toward the erection of a colliseum in Willard Park, at East Washington Street and State Avenue.

George B. Rubens of this city, and J. J. Rubens of Aurora, Ill., owners of the Fox Theater, a motion picture house in Aurora, have leased a building from T. E. Walters in that city for twenty-five years, for $82,500. The Fox Theater is on the banks of the Fox river and can be reached only through a lobby in the Walters Building. The lease on the Walters Building was taken to protect the entrance to the theater.

PHILADELPHIA.

J. T. Davies, of Chicago, who has had considerable experience in the management of parks in and around that city, has been appointed superintendent of Willow Grove Park, to succeed George C. Wynkoop, who resigned recently to assume management of a business in Reading.

An innovation in the moving picture line has been made by Dr. Theodore Weisenberg, professor of neurology at the Medico-Chirurgical College, who before a large number of students and several physicians, successfully introduced the pictures as a means of studying nervous diseases. One reel showed a man suffering with the "tic," a twitching of the abdominal muscles; another was that of a boy suffering from St. Vitus' dance, the lad being unable to remain in the same position for more than a moment at a time. Several other pictures of persons suffering from uncontrollable muscular diseases proved to be highly instructive to the students.

A war of vaudeville syndicates is believed to be back of the attempt on the part of Comstock & Gest to regain control of the Savoy, one of the best paying vaudeville picture houses on the Atlantic City boardwalk. Comstock & Gest some years ago took over the Savoy, under a lease from Nixon & Zimmerman of this city, but after two years sublet the house to Brown & Wesley for the remainder of the lease. Through a change of management the new lessees have made the Savoy a station on the Keith circuit. Comstock & Gest declare that the lease was merely a week-to-week understanding and have brought action to evict Brown & Wesley, under the landlord and tenant proceedings.

The Attel-Kilbane fight pictures were shown at the Empire this week and made a big hit. The lifelike appearance of the fight pictures created great enthusiasm by imparting a realistic impression of occupying a ring seat, while interesting explanations were a pleasing accompaniment.

The suit of Berg Brothers for an injunction to restrain Sigmund Lubin, the Moving Picture Company of America, and the Royal Amusement Company from rebuilding the first story of No. 926 Market Street for moving picture show purposes was called for a hearing before Judge Staake in Common Pleas Court No. 5.

Mayor Kosek of Wilkesbarre, Pa., has ordered the moving picture houses not to show the "Passion Play" on Sunday, at the request of several ministers, who claim that it has caused a falling off in church attendance.

A charter has been applied for by "The Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania," whose purpose is to promote friendly and social intercourse with the members of the league; to foster and protect the morals of the community; to elevate the tone of public entertainments; to encourage a higher standard of morality in the exhibition of fixed and moving pictures and vaudeville shows and to encourage the safe and sanitary condition of moving picture places.

J. Johnke and Thomas J. Mooney are having plans prepared for a one-story moving picture theater, 80 x 165 feet, to be built at Germantown and Huntington Park Avenues, at a cost of about $50,000.

A charter has been issued to Point Breeze Park, an amusement enterprise for this city with a capital of $25,000. Charles P. Donnely and Thomas J. Ryan, who are interested in amusements at Willow Grove, Coney Island and other places, are holders of practically all of the stock.

Accessories used in the moving picture business are affected by the decision of the United States Supreme Court, just announced, to the effect that the owner of a patent has an unrestricted monopoly upon all articles used in its operation, may fix its price and prescribe its use. The Chief Justice, in his dissenting opinion, which was read with great interest by local moving picture men, said, by way of illustration of the far reaching effect of the decision, that the man selling a pateited engine had the right, by contract, to bring under the patent laws all contracts for coal or electrical energy used to afford power to work the machine.

The contract has been placed for alterations to the Photoplay Theater, Fifty-second and Market Streets.

A two-story moving picture theater will be erected at Ridge Avenue and Lauriston Street. It will cost $2,800 and will be 38 x 88 feet.

ST. LOUIS.

One hundred and twenty-five prominent St. Louisans who returned recently from a business trip to Panama brought back some very interesting motion pictures which will shortly be shown before the St. Louis Business Men's League.

Talbot's Hippodrome has proven to be the theatrical sensation here in years. The daily spectacle of 500 to 1,000 people lined up for a block outside the Hippodrome awaiting admission is a daily sight along Sixth Street, the St. Louis "White Way." Basil Webb, the popular press agent for Mr. Talbot, is doing yeoman service. He has a pleasing personality and is a star in his profession.

The Fire Prevention Bureau and the Insurance Interests generally are making an earnest effort to pass a bill in the Municipal assembly restricting office buildings and other large structures against occupancy by exchanges which handle moving picture films. The bill, which is now in committee, provides that film exchanges shall not be housed in a building larger than two stories.

Gra Weller, known in his day as one of the best singers in the country and who was for years with the Dockstader minstrels, is managing the Orpheum on Easton Avenue. Mr. Weller's voice still holds its liquid clearness as it did in the days when he was a national favorite

HOUSTON, TEX.

The new Gem Theater has opened. This is the third picture house opened by Wick's & Co. within the past twelve months.

Wyndham Robertson Moving Picture Supply Company, of Houston, while the big fire was still spreading, took twenty-four views of the $7,000,000 fire and produced authentic slides of same.

During February Mr. Danemeyer, of the Pastime Theater, opened his new picture house known as the Crown. It has a seating capacity of 240 and is new in every detail.

On the 23d inst. at the new Bender Hotel, Houston, every local picture exhibitor was in attendance at a social gathering, at which points of interest in the show business were discussed and refreshments indulged in. Mr. Hennesey Ezell, of the General Flm Company, of Dallas, was among those in attendance.

The Pathe & Gaumont camera men arrived in Houston on the 22d to take views of the recent big fire.

PITTSBURGH.

The latest Jas. B. Clark enterprise shows itself in the Arsenal Theater at Forty-first and Butler Streets. The Arsenal is admitted to be the last word in motion picture theater perfection by Pittsburgh picturedom. One of the ablest motion picture men in western Pennsylvania, and the pioneer exchange man is the owner of this amusement emporium. The guiding spirit of this theater is one of the youngest and most successful motion picture house managers in this neck of the woods, Mr. J. P. Donovan. This young man was formerly chief executive at the Family Theater, Braddock Ave., Braddock, Pa., another of the Clark enterprises. The Arsenal Theater is a one-story building, built to be used for motion pictures only. The lobby is open and has a depth of 15 ft., a length of 47 ft., and a height of 22 ft. and is studded with six solid marble columns, four in the front and two in the back. The cashier's office is built of the fine white marble which comprises the building material for the rest of the lobby. Ample exits, entrances and three four-foot aisles are provided. The fresco which borders the walls and the outside lobby are truly admirable creations of art, and depict scenes of interest to all photoplay goers. The operating room at this theater is roomy and well ventilated. The projection battery consists of two 1912 Motiographs.

The first newspaper to feature a motion picture page in this city is the Pittsburgh Leader. The strong way it is featuring that motion picture page is a delight to all of this city's exhibitors, and these exhibitors appreciate it too, for fully one-third of the page consists of paid advertisements from the leading photiplay theaters announcing coming features.

Mr. Ben F. Jones, the enterprising manager of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Co., of 125 Fourth Ave., is sending weekly notices to Picturedom in Pittsburgh and vicinity of their weekly releases. Bookings have poured in both through the mail and through personal calls. Mr. Krugh is the able assistant of Mr. Jones. The machinery and supply department is managed by Mr. Smith.

Mr. A. S. Davis has just returned from a tri-state tour which lasted almost a week and is back again ready to recruit more exhibitors under the Independent banner.

EDDIE WHEELER.

LOUISVILLE.

A. F. Mayer, local representative of the Swanson-Crawford Film Exchange, has secured another house, the Parkland, and has begun to provide service. West End patrons have returned a favorable verdict in connection with the pictures shown.

Fred Gernert, a lumbarman, who is something of a fanatic on religious matters, has turned his attention to moving picture houses, declaring that one in particular, engenders immorality abonm children. Mr. Gernert's complaint is said to be lodged against the Preston Theater, Preston and Ormsby Streets, that being the only one in the locality to which he refers. Mr. Gernert declared that the matter would be taken into the courts, and if necessary, would be carried to the Court of Appeals. Speaking before about 200 parents and teachers at a meeting, Mr. Gernert delivered himself of the following: "I don't know but that the moving picture shows in this district are an abomination. They have an amateur night every week, and the children are invited to participate in amateur performances." Mr. Gernert in reporting to his audience, was careful to confine his criticisms to amateur nights, and not to the films themselves.

Colored moving pictures were utilized for advertising purposes in this city, recently, the National Cash Register Company hiring a hall and presenting the colored pictures to the public free of charge. Views of the factory at Dayton, O., were mingled with others of more general interest. The exhibition lasted five days.

The West End Amusement Company has filed articles of incorporation. It has a capital stock of $2,500, divided into shares of $25 each. The incorporators and their holdings are: Joseph J. Hancock, four shares; Thomas J. Gilligan, 148 shares, and Joseph F. Kieffer, four shares. A moving picture house will be established in the western section of Louisville.

The Ruby Theater, for colored people, will resume business at Ninth and Walnut Streets shortly, after being out of business a month on account of damage wrought by fire.

Arthur V. Sheckler, local manager of the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, of Cincinnati, has returned from the Queen City, where he held a conference with R. J. Gomes, head of the exchange. Mr. Sheckler provides vaudeville for a number of Louisville photo theaters. He is thinking seriously of moving his office to Owensboro, Ky.

Arn & Simmons, who have practically completed the erection of a new theater at Maysville, Ky., have invited the public of that town to select a name for the new house. A prize of an annual complimentary ticket will be given to the patron whose suggestion is accepted.

Earl K. Lyon, of Lexington, Ky., will enter the moving picture business soon, having leased a site at Frankfort, Ky. Work on the new house will begin at once. Several companies were competing for the lease, among them being the Colonial Amusement Company of Paris, Ky., but Mr. Lyons got there first. The Colonial is still looking for a site in Frankfort, besides now erecting a new theater in Paris. By way of financing the new theater, the capital stock of the concern has been increased from $10,000 to $30,000. Not only will a new theater be erected in Paris, but the company will make improvements in the Colonial and Star Theaters in Lexington. Both will be repainted and decorated, besides which the lighting system will be overhauled. The company has won over officers of the schools in Lexington, offering free admission for one performance to pupils who went through 30 days without being tardy at school. The plan is said to have transformed the school children of the city. Another innovation worth noting is the fact that Michael Crawley, doorkeeper of the Colonial Theater, has been commissioned as a private policeman with authority to make arrests, and has executed bond to act in that capacity.

The doors of the Princess Theater, Nashville, Tenn., were thrown open to the public recently.

The house represents an expenditure of $75,000, and will seat 1,500 people. The theater is located at Church Street and Fifth Avenue. W. P. Ready is manager and part owner of the Princess. The theater will offer both vaudeville and moving pictures, the arrangement being a novel one. The morning show will begin at 10 o'clock, consisting of moving pictures, at five cents admission. At 2.30 o'clock, animated pictures will give way to vaudeville, which will last until 4.30, ten cents being the price. From that time until 7.30, moving pictures will again reign, at a reduction in price. Two vaudeville performances will be given in the evening. The theater embodies many modern points and is said to represent the last word in theater construction. It has two entrances, one on Church Street, the other on Fifth Avenue. Safety was an important consideration, and that phase is cared for by fourteen exits, each indicated by a red light. While the doors are inaccessible from the exterior, anyone on the inside may open them by a pressure on the knob. The idea is a late one. The floor of the theater is sloped, allowing a good view from the rear. City Health Officer Hibbett contributed his ideas to the ventilating and heating system. Five brick furnaces are used in the latter, the air being blown from them through the theater. Counter-suctions take out the foul air. That means that the air in the Princess will be completely changed every five minutes. By reversing the system, cool air will be distributed. A dozen dressing-rooms are features of the equipment behind the scenes. In front, everything has been arranged with the idea of comfort and beauty. The seats are heavily upholstered, while the indirect lighting system is used. The decorations of the asbestos curtain are from the painting of "Thanhauser" and cost $1,500.

Pleasant weather has again struck Louisville, and moving picture men in the city are enjoying full houses after a temporary depression due to unfavorable weather conditions.

The Standard Film Exchange, of Louisville, recently experienced trouble with R. M. Mock, a collector, the difficulty being adjusted satisfactorily, however. Manager H. A. Tickenor appeared in the Police Court, when the colector's trial came up and explained that the company owed Mock a sum of money equal to that which he was accused of stealing. The case was dismissed.

The Dream Bijou, Second and Market streets, has decided to admit children under ten years of age free on certain days, when accompanied by adults. If the plan proves a success, it will be made a permanent institution.

The Sun Theater, Eighteenth and Gallagher streets, is rapidly nearing completion and will be formally opened to the public on Easter Sunday, April 7. H. B. Struby is head of the Pastime Amusement Company, which is erecting the new house. He also owns the Empire Theater, Shelby and Market streets. The Sun will cost several thousand dollars and will be one of the most pretentious in the outlying districts.

Several changes have been announced in the Princess circuit. Ernest Gilman will sing at the Casino Theater, Fourth street, near Green, hereafter. Billy Green will be the vocalist at the Orpheum, Jefferson street, near Fourth, and Clyde Leonard will sing at the Columbia, Fourth street, near Market.

The Star Theater, 728 West Market street, which was recently damaged by fire, is still closed. Mose Bass, owner of the theater, has made no announcement as to whether it will be reopened.

Despite the fact that the Whallen Brothers, who own the property on Jefferson street, near Fourth, have made no definite announcement, much credence is given the rumor that they will erect a big vaudeville and motion picture theater on the site. The Whallens recently returned from a trip through the East, where they conferred with theatrical men regarding the proposition.

The West End Amusement Company, recently incorporated, has begun work on the erection of an airdome at Twenty-sixth and Alford streets. The theater will go up on the southwest corner. If weather conditions are propitious, the first performance will be given about May 1. The heaviest stockholder in the enteruprise is Thomas J. Gilligan, others interested being Joseph J. Hancock and Joseph F. Kieffer. The name for the theater has not yet been selected.

Lexington, Ky., may enter the contest for the State meeting of Kentucky moving picture exhibitors, according to reports from that city. President M. A. Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has written to Manager John Skain, of the Phœnix Hotel, Lexington, asking what facilities could be given the convention. The meeting is scheduled for April, the exact date not having been designated.

Moving pictures will be presented shortly in the Davidson Hall, Barbourville, Ky., work on the building having started. W. M. Sawyer, R. H. Newitt and S. B. Dishman, Jr., are the men interested in the new theater.

Out of 571 names received, the proprietors of the new theater at Maysville, Ky., selected that of the "Gem" as the most appropriate. Arn & Simons offered a year's ticket for the patron whose title was accepted. No less than seven individuals thought of the Gem, and the ticket will therefore be split up. Several reasons were given for the choice, among them being because it is appropriate; because it is easily displayed on an electric sign because of its shortness, because it is easily said, and finally, because it cannot be nicknamed.

J. P. Masters, Bowling Green, Ky., manager of the Crescent Amusement Company, closed the Columbia Theater in that city during Sunday recently for alterations. Two new machines were installed in the operating room, while the theater proper was repapered and decorated. Work began after the Saturday night performance, the theater being open Monday morning.

The Lincoln Theater has opened in Winchester, Ky. Only colored people are admitted. The house is built on modern lines, electric lights and other essentials being in evidence. Early business indicates that the venture will be a success.

Good crowds greeted Kinemacolor pictures shown in Louisville, recently. The National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, O., gave the performances, which were free. Among the attractive features were pictures showing methods of beautifying the surroundings of the factory with shrubbery and flowers.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ENGLAND.

Mr. A. Martin intends to open a first-class photoplay theater in Somerville, Mass., provided certain citizens do not bother him too much. At present there are a number of Somerville people who do not wish a theater to be operated by Mr. Martin. No definite action has been taken by the mayor.

The Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., which offered vaudeville and pictures until recently, and which is now offering stock company attractions, will close this month. The Central Square may return to pictures again and it may remain "dark." At any rate it can not continue to offer straight drama, as the Auditorium Theater of Lynn, has taken all the available shows itself, leaving the Central Square without any attractions.

Work on the rebuilding of the Bates Opera House, Attleboro, Mass., will be started as soon as the weather becomes more favorable. The Opera House was badly damaged by fire this winter. The new house is promised to be far more up-to-date than was the old house.

R. L. Moore, the well-known secretary of the educational department of the Y. M. C. A., has decided that moving pictures will be a great addition to the Worcester, Mass., Y. M. C. A., and announces that educational photoplays are to be a regular feature as soon as he can perfect plans for the installation of the machine, etc.

The new theater being built in Bridgeport, Conn., for S. Z. Poli, is now well under way, and is expected to be completed about October 1, 1912. This house is to be one of the finest in the country, and Mr. Poli's representatives say the cost will be nearly $400,000. The total seating capacity will be about 2,700. With this house in the process of erection it would take a very optimistic man to build a house in Bridgeport.

The Colonial Theater, Lawrence, Mass., which was presenting vaudeville and pictures, was closed some time ago, due to poor business.

Some time ago the writer stated in these columns that the Colonial could be made a winner, but that expert management and good shows were needed. The Colonial has a large seating capacity, but is not in a prominent location. It is rumored that Marcus Loew has acquired this house, to be opened immediately by him, as a vaudeville and picture house. Now that the Colonial has come into capable hands the writer is positive that this house will show a balance on the right side of the ledger.

The Cambridge Theater, Cambridge, Mass., has rounded up the two men who stole $250 from the box-office. W. H. Flannagan and Thomas Connors have been caught and are being held in $500 for the Grand Jury.

The Bright Theater, Meriden, Conn., is another new house devoting itself to pictures and vaudeville. The house is strictly first-class in every way, and is one of the best in Meriden. Mr. S. Mule has the management of the Bright Theater, which seats 800. First reports from this house state that S. R. O. has been the case every evening.

The new Union Theater, Providence, R. I., is doing very nicely, with a program of vaudeville and pictures. Mr. Charles Allen has charge of the Union.

H. W. Gibson, connected with the Men and Religion Forward Movement, at a conference held in Lawrence, Mass., stated that motion pictures should be used in connection with Sunday school work. Mr. Gibson remarked that young people demand action—"something doing" all the time. The lack of action in the usual Sunday school explains why there are so many vacant seats, and so many uninterested pupils. Motion pictures supply the action and life that is needed, and, on this account, Mr. Gibson believes in motography as an aid to modern Sunday school work. Local exhibitors inform the writer that it is their opinion that most of the Congregational churches of Lawrence will install machines, as a result of Mr. Gibson's views.

The new Apollo Theater, Boston, Mass., has come in for some free and undesirable publicity. It seems that C. W. Cooper, a special officer, had badly beaten a young boy of 13 years. Officer Cooper ejected this lad from the Apollo Theater because of a disturbance in the house of which the boy was thought to have been the leader. Later in the week the boy came to the Apollo again, making no disturbance. Officer Cooper remembered him and refused him admittance. It is claimed that the boy was struck by Cooper on this occasion. Cooper has been fined $20 for this assault and has appealed the case. This is mighty bad business for any theater to be mixed up in and especially a new house like the Apollo. The affair created considerable comment locally.

Exhibitors hereabouts are in receipt of a communication from the Sales Company, which tells that the Independent manufacturers have gained an importat legal victory as regards the Latham Patent. The letter also states that any exhibitor, using independent service exclusively, can depend on the Sales Company to defend any law suit for alleged infringements of patents. The letter brings out the word "exclusively" very prominently. It is stated that there are a number of houses in New England that are exhibiting both licensed and independent service, although this has never been proven.

The Orpheum Theater, East Elm Street, Brockton, Mass., has been opened, after being closed all season. The house is under new management, and is using Licensed pictures and vaudeville. Business is reported to be satisfactory.

Keith's Theater, Campello, Mass., which has been presenting a straight picture show, is now adding vaudeville to the programs. Manager Foster is experimenting with his new house, and business is not over good so far.

The Palace Theater, Boston, evidently found the "Crusaders" to be an unusually good box-office attraction, and played a return date this week.

The Plaza Theater, Malden, Mass., opened to the public last week with a bill of licensed pictures. Manager Singer evidently found the public of Malden did not care for this entertainment, and closed the house after a life of one week. The truth is that the Malden Auditorium has the situation in Malden too well in hand, and there is but small chance for any competition to win out. The Auditorium is one of the finest theaters in Massachusetts.

It is rumored that William Durfee, owner of the Savoy Theater, Fall River, Mass., will soon start work in enlarging his house. The house will seat close to 3,000 when completely renovated. The house is reported as successful, playing vaudeville and pictures, but may change its policy to stock in the near future.

The Lawrence Central Labor Union hopes to gain funds from the concert to be held at the Grand Opera House, Boston. This concert is to aid the striking textile workers of Lawrence, and is being arranged by the joint committee of the Boston Central Labor Union executive board and other similar organizations. The local union of moving picture operators have promised to supply a good proportion of the show.

The Colonial Theater, Newport, R. I., is reported to be doing mighty well this year, and is offering a big program of vaudeville and pictures.

The Theater Comique, of Revere Beach, Mass., one of New England's great resorts, and a miniature Coney Island, announces its opening of the season, on Sunday, March 24. The Dream has been open for some time, and is doing a big business, with pictures. Admission is 5 cents, and packed houses are the rule, especially on Saturdays and Sundays.

David A. Ellis, of the Boston School Committee, recently predicted that motion pictures would soon be used in all Boston schools. This statement is distinctly encouraging, as the Boston School Committee has not looked over favorably on motography, and some of the members have publicly voiced their adverse attitude.

Bennington, Vt., is to have a new vaudeville and picture house, located on North Street. Bennington is behind the times as regards modern photoplay houses, and the contemplated house should find things all its own way.

The Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., which was just opened to the public, is finding business very good. Goldstein Brothers, owners of the Plaza, entertained members of the city government, the press and officials at the opening performance. After the show this party was entertained by an after-theater supper at Rahar's Inn.

The Lyric Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., has decided to enlarge its seating capacity by means of a balcony. Manager Isham claims he is unable to accommodate the crowds.

IN SELF-DEFENSE

The Majestic Motion Picture Company Voluntarily Withdraws From

and ceases further affiliation with the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company and will sell its product to any and all Independent Exchanges which are willing to assert

THEIR REAL INDEPENDENCE!

The penalty of 2 cents a foot commission exacted by the Sales Co. from the Majestic Company has reached such proportions that for many weeks we have paid them approximately $1000 a week. Common sense will tell everybody that nobody could continue under such extortion.

Of all the Independent manufacturers marketing through the Sales Co., the Majestic alone was called to pay this enormous bounty.

If the Independent Exchanges had derived any financial benefit from this impossible situation, we would not mind it so much, but we understand that every cent of this bountiful fee was placed in a fund which lessened each manufacturer's contribution to the legal controversy with the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Whatever profits may arise from the continued efforts of this company, justly belong to the company itself and may be distributed any way it disposes and, with that in mind, we make the following proposition to all Independent Exchanges:

OUR PROPOSITION TO ALL EXCHANGES!

Two cents of every ten cents paid by any and all Exchanges for Majestic pictures went to the benefit of the Sales Co. We now are willing to share that two cents a foot with all Exchanges in the following manner—shipping the releases to the Exchanges direct.

Our price will be 10 cents a foot to any exchange buying either Tuesday or Sunday release

A discount of 10 per cent will be given to any and all single exchanges which buy both the Tuesday and unday releases

This 10 per cent. cannot be obtained by one Exchange in one city buying one release and a branch Exchange in another city buying the other release. Each Exchange must stand alone.

All shipments to be made on a cash basis and will begin with release of March 31

All posters will be 5 cents each, and they will be artistic ones

The first release to be shipped direct will be "The Lighted Candle" a wonderfully strong dramatic picture. Release date Sunday, March 31st. The last release shipped through the Sales Company will be "Opportunity" Tuesday, March 26th.

NOW ABOUT MAJESTIC PICTURES

The Exhibitors throughout the country have emphasized their appreciation of the quality of Majestic pictures by their continued demand—their letters to us prove conclusively that our pictures are the favored ones—we will hold that confidence for all time because we will now spend more money than ever to attain all that is perfection in story, producing, acting and photography.

Our ALL STAR STOCK COMPANY is composed of some of the greatest favorites in the motion pictures business—we will not stop there, but will secure more of the favorites from time to time until the Majestic is the most popular picture in the industry.

EXCHANGE MAN'S OPPORTUNITY

We cannot figure how any Independent Exchange owner can fail to take advantage of the liberal offer of the Majestic—it is fair—it is mutual—and it is a forerunner of the Exchange owner's opportunities to save and make some money for himself. Order TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK DIRECT FROM THE MAJESTIC COMPANY and save 10 PER CENT. ON THE PRICE YOU ARE NOW PAYING.

OUR FIRST TWO RELEASES DIRECT:

Sunday, March 31st. "THE LIGHTED CANDLE"

Drama with an intensely thrilling climax—a great catastrophe averted at the critical moment.

Tuesday, April 2nd. "KEEP QUIET"

A farce comedy of domestic complications

Sunday, April 7th. "A DANGEROUS MODEL"

Tuesday, April 9th. "A WARRIOR BOLD"

WHERE the EXHIBITOR COMES IN!

If his Exchange purchases TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK, he will be assured of at least two clean, wholesome pictures each week—and will be sure of at least two good paying days each week

THE EXCHANGE PROFITS! THE EXHIBITOR PROFITS! THE MAJESTIC PROFITS!
Let the Exhibitors and the Exchanges do their work and the Majestic will not fail them

VITAGRAPH.

THE STAR REPORTER (April 1).—Jack Wilson has saved and deposited two thousand dollars in the Northern bank, in his wife's name. The bank is reported to be shaky. The editor of Jack's paper assigns him to look into the matter for the next morning's edition, Jack gets into the director's room and hides. He overhears that they will close the bank at 3 o'clock that very day. Jack's presence is discovered. They try to detain him until after 3 o'clock. Jack, breaking away, makes a bee-line for the newspaper office with his story. He telephones his wife to go to the bank and draw her money. She gets there just in time to draw it. As she comes from the bank Jack's report is being shouted by the newsboys, announcing the failure of the Northern bank. They purchase a new home with their savings.

HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW (April 1).—His mother-in-law, whom Jones has never seen, writes her daughter she will visit her for a few days. She encloses a photograph of herself. Mrs. Jones takes the photograph from the envelope and replaces it with a comic post card, labeled "His Mother-in-Law," advertising a show by that name. Jones reads the letter. He is furious, leaves the house in a "peeve." He meets a bill-poster putting up one sheet of the play 'His Mother-in-Law." In a mix-up with the paster he comes out second best. He goes home and hides behind a screen, ready to give his wife's mother a warm reception. She enters. He beholds a sweet- kindly lady, with whom he at once falls in love. His wife shouts with laughter:—"April Fool!"

SHE NEVER KNEW (April 2).—Left with the care of his little grandchild through the death of his daughter, old Mr. Blinn tries in every way to give her the care and attention which she needs. The little one is taken sick. His mind is disturbed and the strain and worry so upset him that he makes mistakes in his accounts and his employer discharges him.

He never lets his little grandchild know of his position, always maintaining a cheerful appearance in her presence. Unable to secure employment he begs upon the streets to secure means to pay a physician to attend the little girl. Her sickness is a fatal one and when it seems impossible for the old man to hold out longer, she peacefully passes away. Left alone, the old man happily and resignedly awaits his fate and the summons: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of the Lord."

THE SEVENTH SON (April 3).—At the outbreak of the Civil War in the United States, the six sons of widow Beecham enlist. The seventh son is very anxious to join the army and fight for his country, but his brothers insist upon his remaining home with his mother. At the "Battle of Bull Run" three of the brothers are killed. The seventh son, fired with patriotism, goes to the front, leaving his old mother alone. He distinguishes himself for bravery, saving his colonel's life during the "Battle of the Wilderness" at which three more of the widow's sons are killed. The youngest boy, his nerves shattered, flees in terror. He is brought up on charges of desertion and sentenced to death. Secretary of War Stanton receives an appeal from the boy's mother, but refuses to recommend his pardon.

The widowed mother calls on the President personally. She is granted an interview. Lincoln listens with the tender sympathy for which he was noted. The bereaved mother unbosoms her overburdened soul and tells him of the six graves filled with the bodies of her sons, who fought and died for their country. With tears, she pleads for her last and only boy, the hope and love of her old age. The old lady anxiously awaits his decision and is about to leave his presence when the President calls her back and hands her her boy's pardon, saying: "You have given six sons for your country and I am going to give you the seventh."

THE ILLUMINATION (April 5).—The Illumination depicts the last days of Christ. His death and burial; in and about Jerusalem under the Roman rule and occupancy during the reign of Caesar. The story is that of Joseph, a young Jew, who is led to believe in Christ through His miraculous power and spiritual influence among men. He is denounced by his family and friends, but he continues to follow the Nazarene, and shows such purity and sanctity of mind and character that they, too, become followers of Jesus. Even the imperturbable Roman centurion, Maximus, who would have killed the Christ, is brought under His gentle influence.

After the crucifixion, as He uttered His last words: "It is finished!" the Temple of Jerusalem is rent. A great darkness pervades the earth. The heavens pour out lurid flashes of light as if searching the uttermost corners of the globe to lead them to the truth and pointing the way. Scoffers and unbelievers hasten to do homage at His tomb.

THE UNKNOWN VIOLINIST (April 6).—The precious Cremona, owned by the old violin maker, is his model to equal which is his one ambition. Upon retiring for the night he locks it in the drawer of his cabinet with the same anxiety he would his own soul. He is not well asleep when a poverty-stricken violinist of former fame breaks into the shop, forces open the cabinet and takes out the violin. At once he thinks of his achievements in concert and his greatness in public. As he clasps the Cremona to his bosom he sees pasted on the wall an announcement of a violin contest to be held the following evening. He steals the coveted instrument and, in all his rags and tatters, appears as a participant in the contest. His skill and all the spirit of his being is thrown into the great Cremona and amid the applause and bravos of the audience, he is presented with the first prize, a magnificent silver cup. His heart is filled with rejoicing and gladness.

At midnight he returns to the violin-maker's shop. Finding the place in darkness he steals in and leaves the violin, with the silver trophy, to pay for the use of the Cremona, on the violin maker's bench, where the old musician finds it the next morning. His joy is unbounded, but imagine his astonishment when he beholds the silver emblem, inscribed as the first prize, won by the unknown violinist. He understands what it means and more fully values his possession.

ESSANAY.

THE LOAN SHARK (March 15).—Richard Montague and his pretty wfie are very happy in their little home. Montague is a collector for a business concern and, one day, accidentally loses $150 of the firm's money. Realizing he must replace the money at once or probably lose his position, Montague reads a "loan shark" ad in the paper, goes to the "shark's" office and secures the necessary money by signing a promissory note and agreeing to pay the exorbitant rate of 20 per cent. interest on the principal. Months go by and Montague has already paid the principal back in interest, but still is compelled to go on paying interest because of the note he has signed. His wife, however, finally questions him and he confesses to her his trouble. Realizing the clutches of the "loan shark" must be thrown off or their home wrecked, the wife goes to the "shark's" office and, through a clever trick, obtains a large package of notes from the desk, springs to the fire and threatens to burn them all unless the "shark" cancels her husband's note and mails it before her eyes. Seeing he is trapped, and realizing he must give up one victim in order to keep the other notes, the 'shark" obeys her command, then rages as she smiles sweetly on him and leaves. That evening Montague learns what his brave little wife has done, takes her in his arms joyfully and happiness once more reigns in the home. (This picture was released in place of The Madman," scheduled for release on this date, but which the Essanay Company is holding for some future date.)

CURED (April 2).—Millicent Madden, a pretty young woman of wealth, falls desperately in love with a photo of the popular singer, Adolfo Frenzee. Millicent worships before the photo daily and finally writes Adolfo a letter raving over him and adding that to possess a lock of his hair would be bliss. Millicent now drives her father to the railway station in their electric runabout, sees him off on the train, then happens to discover an ad in the paper inserted by Madam Frenzee, wanting a neat, willing girl for light work. Millicent immediately applies for the place, so as to be near her adored Adolfo. However, she soon finds that all is not so charming as she had thought. Madam Frenzee clips a lock of hair from the dog, encloses it in a letter and sends Millicent to mail it. Millicent discovers the letter is addressed to her, opens it, finds the dog-hair, and is furious at such deceit, Stormng back into the house, she finds Adolfo, who has arrived in a dreadfully bad temper. He storms at her attentions and finally compels her to bathe his feet in a tub of water. This is too much for Millicent, who, realizing Frenzee is far from the idol she thought, souses him with the tub of water and rages home a sadder and wiser girl. Consequently the great Frenzee is confined to his bed that night with a severe cold and his recital is postponed, thanks to Millicent's water-bath.

A LUCKY MIX-UP (April 4).—Howard Missimer loves Eleanor Hill, but she writes him a letter saying she is leaving home for reasons she cannot explain and hopes to meet him some day under more happy circumstances. Howard is in despair, but resigns himself to his fate. Three years later Howard falls deeply in love with a stunning widow. One evening he calls with flowers and is dumbfounded to see the widow in the parlor with a young man who is caressing her most tenderly. Howard rages out, then has an idea, pretends to be in the last stages of intoxication, returns and creates a scene in the widow's library, making her wildly jealous by pretending to be in love with an actress whose photo he has clipped from the morning paper, and whose name is LaBelle Daisy. In a glorious fit of jealousy, the widow storms to the theater, meets LaBelle Daisy in her dressing room and a hair-pulling match ensues that lands them both in the nearest police station. Howard is informed of the affair, goes to the station and bails both women out. They are a sight in their torn finery and frowsy hair, and Howard is about to escort the widow home, when a scream from LaBelle Daisy causes him to turn. One look and he grabs her in a fond embrace. She is his long-lost Eleanor, and the widow collapses in the arms of the nearest cop as Howard disappears out the door with Eleanor clinging proudly to his arm.

TEACHING A LIAR A LESSON (April 5).—Billy Barclay is a natural-born braggart. He butts into the love-affair of George Lessing, an artist, wins the affection of Mabel and absorbs all of her attention, much to the supreme disgust of Lessing and Fred, Mabel's brother. One afternoon Billy calls on Mabel and immediately begins a long-winded harangue of how he once was unjustly sentenced to death in a French prison, but easily escaped. The scene changes, and we see Barclay in the prison, a ball and chain about his ankle. A drove of gendarmes enter and the death-warrant is being read when Billy tears it up, wallops the gendarmes into a heap in the corner with the iron ball, then twists the bars from the windows and coolly wafts himself down some thousands of feet to safety. The next tale Billy tells is of foiling a band of Russian Anarchists, and we see him brave the Anarchists in their den. His disguise is penetrated and he is left bound to a table with a huge bomb sizzling on his stomach. But again he easily frees himself and, when the Anarchists enter, scatters them to the four winds with the aid of the lighted bomb and secures valuable data for the Czar. Now these yarns have been heard by Lessing and he plans revenge. He inserts an ad in the paper asking Barclay to call at a certain number "as there is something coming to him." Barclay calls, is met by Lessing, who is disguised as an agent of the Czar, frightens Billy out of his wits and gets his signature to a paper confessing he was never in France, never saw an Anarchist and that hanging is too good for him. Thus it is that Billy goes his way a sadder but wiser man, while Lessing wins back Mabel for his wife.

A ROAD AGENT'S LOVE (April 6).—May Parker, a pretty western girl, drives to the railway station one morning for a trunk. The trunk is much too heavy for her to handle and she is making futile efforts to lift it into the buggy when a stalwart young fellow steps up, lifts the heavy affair easily into the rig and doffs his hat politely. May is greatly smitten with his handsome face. May is him prettily and drives away. Later, old Parker gets into financial straits and is pressed for time by a crabbed money-lender who threatens trouble if the mortgage is not settled. The landlord, Perkins by name, now meets May and instantly falls in love with her. He now proposes to Parker that he will extend hic all the time he wants to get financially on his feet if he can have May for his wife. Parker informs May, who heroically agrees to sacrifice herself to save her father. She now meets the stalwart stranger and tells him of their trouble. Later this stranger receives a note from May saying she is going to marry old Perkins to save her father from giving up their home. With an air of determination the stranger crosses to an old tree-stump on which is a placard offering a reward of $5,000 for the capture of Fargo, a notorious bandit. With a grim smile he gazes off toward the smoky hills—for he is Fargo! An hour later May receives a note from "a friend," telling her Fargo is hiding in Rattle Snake Cave and for her to capture him and get the reward, thus save herself from Perkins. May summons the sheriff and a posse and leads them to the cave where Fargo quietly submits to capture. May recognizes him and starts to plead with the sheriff to set him free, but Fargo prevents and is led away. May is paid $5,000 and old Perkins, a picture of bitter disappointment, pockets the mortgage money and leaves, while May promises her mother to wait for Fargo until he is released from jail.

KALEM.

JEAN OF THE JAIL (April 1).—It was the boast of Pedro, the enfeebled old jailor, that in his many years of service he had never lost a prisoner. His success was in a large measure due to the co-operation of his daughter, Jean.

Jose, a dashing young Spaniard, who was in love with Jean, sought her hand, but the young woman coquettishly postponed her answer from day to day.

At length there came to the jail a party headed by the Alcalde, which had as a prisoner Garcia, a noted bandit. He was placed within a cell and, as usual, Pedro announced that he would be kept securely until the time of trial.

The old jailor did not seem to understand that the years were pressing down upon him and shortly after the arrival of the bandit, the old man was stricken with an attack of sickness. Jean ministered to him faithfully. Neither saw the approach of Luisa, a Spanish girl and confederate of Garcia, who crept to the prisoner's window and passed him a file, with which he penetrated the bars and effected an escape. Hearing a commotion, Jean rushed to the cell just in time to see the couple escaping on the one horse, and a misdirected shot from her pistol brought Luisa to the ground. The bandit, assuring himself that his companion was dead, took to the hills.

Soon the Alcalde would arrive and take the prisoner, and Jean was almost overcome with apprehension. She told Jose that here was a chance to demonstrate his worth. If he would capture the outlaw, she would give him her hand. With such an incentive, Jose followed the fleeing Spaniard over crag and torrent. Through the rough country sped pursued and pursuer. Abandoning his horse, Garcia climbed a cliff but Jose, close at his heels, overcame him and after a desperate struggle, brought the prisoner back to the jail.

Meanwhile the Alcalde had arrived and was censuring the fast falling Pedro for his inefficiency. Jean, having confidence in her lover, pled for time and at last Jose arrived with his captive. But the shock had been too much for the old jailor and his years of service were at an end. As the prisoner was conducted from the room, Jean and Jose knelt at the bedside and offered a prayer that their lives might be as honorable.

THE SPANISH REVOLT OF 1836 (April 3).—Juan Alvarado, a Californian, found himself deeply in love with Isabella, daughter of Galvez, the Alcalde. When he made it known that he wished to pay court to the young lady, she announced that no ordinary man could win her hand.

Alvarado was not the only one attracted by the fair Isabella. Chico, the cruel and irascible Governor, became infatuated with the Alcalde's daughter and openly insulted her by his advances. When she spurned him, Chico, seeking vengeance, removed her father from office, falsely stating that he was grossly incompetent.

The people arose in indignation and demanded that Chico resign from the office of Governor. This he refused and when the people became threatening, he ordered Galvez, the Alcade, thrust into prison and then asked that he pacify the Californians by appealing for the Governor—a proceeding which the Alcalde refused to consider.

The people looked to the young Alvarado as their leader and it was to him that Isabella came, asking that he liberate her father and deliver them from the tyrrany of Chico. As the Governor refused all audiences, the open revolt began and the presidio was bombarded. The Californians had secured possession of several cannon and the Governor's soldiers were unable to withstand the fierce assault. The tyrant was forced to abdicate. the Alcalde was released and Isabella, finding that Alvarado was a hero in every sense of the word. gave him her promise.

THE SCHOOLMA'M OF STONE GULCH (April 5).—Dick, foreman of the Way Up Ranch, learns that Bess, the new school teacher, is his employer's niece. At the dance which takes place the day following her arrival, Dick asks her to dance with him, but as they have not been formally introduced, she refuses. The next morning Bess mistakes Dick for the cook, and orders him to prepare the lunch which she takes to school. Dick, appreciating the situation, fills her lunch pail with raw onions, eggs, just from the nest, and a loaf of stale bread. When noon time arrives, Bess is indignant at the trick played upon her, and when Dick comes with the buckboard to take her home, she refuses to ride with him, declaring she will walk. Dick gives Bess his gun to scare away the Indians. He drives off and Bess, very much afraid, starts on the long journey home. Dick drives off the main road, hides the horses and awaits the young lady's arrival.

How Bess is finally conquered and the old saying: "It's funny what a difference a few hours make," are depicted in detail in the film

LUBIN.

NUTTY'S GAME (March 28).—"Nutty," a harmless lunatic, one day sneaks away from his keepers. He then runs amuck and brandishing a large knife tells Buxton Brown to run. The people on the street are badly scared and permit the lunatic to chase his victim. At last Brown falls down and Nutty, with leaps and bounds, reaches him. Nutty throws his knife away and touches Brown on the shoulder shouting: "Tag, you're it." At this point the keepers, followed by the crowd, run up and lead Nutty away.

TIM AND JIM (March 28).—Sylus Jenks, an old widower, has a daughter Bess, and in the house also is pretty Nora, the cook. Like most children of 17 or 18, they have sweethearts, much to dad's worryment. Nora loves Tim Sullivan, the grocery boy, and Bess Jenks loves Jim Jones. Dadda don't like Jim any too well and will not have him in the house. One day Nora catches Jim kissing Bess and thinks it is Tim. She goes up in the air and for a few seconds there is "rough house." When the mistake is discovered Nora gets an idea, the first she has ever had. Tim is coaxed into a dress suit and a letter is planted where Dad will find it. The letter supposedly written by Jim, disclosed the fact that he and Bess will elope that evening. The old man goes on a hunt for Bess and failing to find her, grabs Tim thinking him to be Jim. Jim and Bess slip off and get married while dad is having his session with Tim. Then the bride and groom come back home to be forgiven and congratulate Nora on her engagement to Tim.

THE SOCIAL SECRETARY (Mar. 30).—Laura Tryon, a young widow, finds it hard to make a living for herself and her son, Brooks. She answers an ad for a social secretary and is engaged in that capacity by Beatrice Wallington, a society girl. Beatrice is engaged to Kempton Greene, a society man, but the pair are not really in love with each other. Greene and Laura fall in love, but Laura, believing that she is doing Beatrice a wrong by taking Greene's love away from her, leaves the Wallington home. Greene tries in vain to locate the young widow. Beatrice, meanwhile, falls really in love with a young duke and asks Greene to release her from their engagement. Greene does so without regret. After leaving the Wallington home, Laura and little Brooks are about to be turned out of their little room, when the child gets a notion in his baby head that he will go to work and make some money. He steals from the house and starts on a job hunting expedition. The little fellow tackles everyone he meets and causes much amusement to different people by his earnest request for a "job." But fate guided the child in his search. Kempton Greene, in his office, was surprised when a very little boy entered and with all the seriousness in the world announced that he wanted to work for Greene in order to make money for his mamma. Greene decides he'd take little Brooks home. He did and found that the little man's mother was the woman he cared for more than all else in the world. Greene married the young widow, while Beatrice married her duke.

THE MINE ON THE YUKON (April 2).—Mr. Black died in the wilds of the Yukon district while searching for gold and left a wife and daughter in straitened circumstances. One day the widow receives a letter from one of her husband's former companions stating that he died without leaving anything of value.

The mine he owned and worked is looked upon as worthless and can hardly be considered an asset. Mrs. Black, however, has not lost faith in her deceased husband's judgment and putting her daughter in a boarding school, she manages to scrape together enough money to make the journey. Her arrival at the camp creates a sensation and she is duly installed in her husband's cabin and then escorted to his mine. Here she engages several men to work the abandoned mine. Her small supply of money soon dwindles. The men she has employed leave in disgust and she decides to work the mine herself. The men in camp ridicule her and it is only through the efforts of Bill Jones that she is left unmolested. Her hardships are finally rewarded and she strikes a rich vein only to collapse completely from the strain of the work. Through the nursing of Bill she is again brought around. Upon her recovery she finds that a Swede has jumped her claim. During a blizzard the Swede falls exhausted in the snow while his partner manages to crawl into camp and give the alarm. The men refuse to venture out in such a storm and it is only through the efforts of Mrs. Black that he is rescued. In return for this service the Swede returns to her the mine, and her cup of happiness is filled by the unexpected arrival of her daughter.

TWO KNIGHTS IN A BARROOM (April 3).—Weary Willie, wending his way to the main thoroughfare of the town, starts his panhandling at a bakery, where he is thrown out. He then tries his luck at the cobbler's, clothing store and barber shop, and in each instance meets with severe treatment. He is half famished when he meets two young men about town who for a joke invite him to have a drink. Entering a cafe, they behold the barkeeper fondly gazing at two suits of ancient armor mounted upon pedestals.

They repair to the bar and the tramp indulges to his heart's content, after which he curiously examines the knights' armor and falls asleep on the chair. He dreams that the knights come to life and offer their services as his body guard. We now see him leading the knights forth. First he goes to the baker's cellar, where he commands the knights to throw the baker into a vat of dough while he gobbles down pies and cakes. Next to the cobbler's, where he confiscates a pair of shoes, while the knights hammer the tall, protesting cobbler down, reducing him to a dwarf. In the clothing store he succeeds in securing a new outfit. They next proceed to the barber shop, where the knights coerce the frightened barber into shaving the tramp and cutting his hair in the latest fashion. Weary Willie drags the barber under the shower bath and receives a goodly portion of the spray himself. At that moment he is rudely awakened by the barkeeper's siphon playing a forceful stream on his face.

CHARLIE'S REFORM (April 5).—A clerk is seen calling upon his best girl and surrounded by her family, including very unwelcome small brothers and small sisters. Her parents refuse to allow her to go out with him in the evening and they consequently separate. He goes to one of the cheaper dance halls. The result of this incident is that the love story is broken and we see the young man go from bad to worse until he finally loses his position and spends his time in saloons.

Meanwhile the girl has been invited to one of the social centers at one of the public school buildings, has joined the dancing class there and met other boys and girls. So it happens that after a lapse of time our hero sees his one time sweetheart in the company of another young man. He follows them out of jealousy, forces his way into the social center and pushes past the old doorkeeper in an attempt to find the youth who has supplanted him. When he finds the girl the young man is not with her, but by this time the director of the social center has brought an officer to put the intruder out. The girl, however, stepping forward, forestalls the director by introducing our hero as her friend and asking the director to make him welcome. This, and the director's kindness, completely disarms the young man, and having had a glimpse of other kinds of fun he is only too glad to become one of the frequenters of the social center. Of course he wins back his lost position and of course he wins the girl.

ROWDY AND HIS NEW PAL (April 6).—Bob is sent on an errand, leaving Rowdy on the porch with orders to stay there, but the temptation is too great, so Rowdy disobeys and follows. However, among the crowds Rowdy loses the scent and is soon hopelessly lost. Several newsboys, realizing this, grab Rowdy and start to abuse him. He is rescued by Pietro, also a newsboy, who takes him to his little shanty and shares his bed and board with the homeless pup. In the meantime poor Bob is disconsolate.

Rowdy takes kindly to his new home and his pal, but one morning Pietro finds himself too ill to get up and work. Rowdy tries to rouse him, but finding this of no use, decides to provide for his sick protector, so visits the neighboring houses and soon returns with a stolen loaf of bread. A bottle of milk is the next contribution.

In the meantime the neighbors aroused at having their bread and milk stolen, decide to watch for the thief. Rowdy is detected and followed to the shack and there in the midst of the stolen plunder, Pietro is found weak and exhausted. An ambulance is called and Pietro is hurried to the hospital.

Bob and his father passing by are just in time to see Rowdy enter the ambulance and in company with the officer hurry to the hospital. Here a happy reunion of Bob and Rowdy takes place and Bob's father, hearing of Pietro's lonely existence, offers to take him home. He accepts.

DR. BROMPTON-WATTS' AGE ADJUSTER (April 6).—An elderly couple pass Dr. Brompton-Watts' Sanatorium, where they read his alluring sign. They go inside to talk it over with the doctor. The husband decides to try getting his youth back and is only too successful, as he takes an overdose of the restorative so that sixty years are taken off his life and he becomes an infant again. Then the little one drinks the rest of the dose and it is transformed back to the monkey stage of man's evolution. The doctor discovers the mistake and gives him just enough to make him a young man, which is what he wanted.

The wife, being satisfied with her age, refuses to take the treatment, and when she sees her husband a youth she tells him she liked him better as an old man, so he is brought back to his original age.

SELIG.

HIS CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD (April 1).—Spike Dorgan, ex-convict, by chance meets Lizzie Hogan, the daughter of an aged washerwoman. The Hogans, though poor and illiterate, are good people with certain high minded ideas, and Spike is not long in their company before he "cuts out" all of his old pals, etc. His reformation is practically complete when he "spruces up" and secures honest employment as a plumber. With the earnings of his first job, he buys a $1.98 "diamond" engagement ring, and proudly presents it to Lizzie. Dreams of the future were never more rosy than those indulged in by Lizzie and Spike, when suddenly their happiness is marred by Spike's arrest. He is charged with having stolen his "diamond" ring from the home of wealthy Mrs. Rankin, whom he had visited that day in his capacity of plumber. Spike, Lizzie and the ring are dragged into court. Spike's past record is brought out and shown to Lizzie. As Spike is about to be convicted on the flimsy circumstantial evidence, a report reaches the court that the ring has been found. Spike is acquitted and Lizzie assures him that his past is his own—and his future hers.

TENDERFOOT BOB'S REGENERATION (April 2).—Bob Haines, a rough, irresponsible fellow, is seen with a crowd of drunken companions in a small cattle town of the West. The good citizens of the community have decided to rid themselves of Bob and his kind. The Committee finds Bob in a saloon, overcome with drink. Among the ranchers is an old cattleman who has long had a friendly feeling for the unfortuiate boy and at a crucial moment rescues him from those who would drive him from the town.

The old man finds a letter from the boy's aged mother in the East; she is poor and in dire financial straits. At the solicitation of the old cattleman a few of the citizens, unbeknown to Bob, make up a purse and send it to the poor woman. She receives the money by telegraph and finding it to be more than her needs require, telegraphs back her thanks to her generous son and informs him that she is coming to visit him in his far-off Western home. Bob receives the message and learns of the old cattleman's generous deed. The old mother arrives in the little town and, thanks to the deception and generosity of the old cattleman, finds her son (as she believes) a prosperous, benevolent citizen.

ME AND BILL (April 4).—The story starts with Sam and Bill as youngsters back in the quaint days of the Forties. They are inseparable, companions, and from the school days down to extreme old age their life journey together is shown. Each loves and afterwards marries a lass in the home town, and the two couple settle down as neighbors. Bill becomes the father of a girl, Sam the father of a boy. The life story of these two is then taken up and carried along with those of the old men. The children grow up to be the comforts of their fathers' lives, especially after the good mothers are called by death.

Kitty and Bill, Jr., plight their troth, but before the marriage is consummated the Civil War breaks out and Bill, Jr., marches away to the front. There he is killed in the explosion of an ammunition wagon. The news of the boy's death almost prostrates poor old Sam, who finds consolation only in his old friend, Bill. Kitty, agonized by the knowledge of her lover's death, is last seen sitting in the old rowboat at the edge of the water, where so often she and Bill, Jr., sat, and their fathers before them. As Sam and Bill walk beside the shore that afternoon, Bill comforting Sam for the loss of his boy—the body of Kitty drifes to their feet. Then it is Bill who finds himself face to face with awful grief, and the two bereft old friends turn to each other with one impulse in their hour of mutual gloom.

WOLCOTT COOMBS—THE PHENOMENAL DEAF AND BLIND BOY (April 5).—Young Coombs is deaf and blind and only seventeen years of age, yet in three years he has accumulated more education and practical knowledge than most sighted boys master in twice that time. To those who are familiar with the career of Miss Helen Keller, this boy's accomplishments will be doubly interesting. Three years ago he came under the supervision of Mr. Harry L. Virden, then principal of a large school for the blind. Virden was so impressed with young Coomb's determination to secure an education that he decided to devote his entire time to furthering this boy's training. Without funds or training facilities, there veing no school for the deaf-blind, the outlook was far from bright, but progress proved rapid, however, and young Coombs expects to enter college in the near future. The picture shows us Coombs weaving rugs, making hammock, caning chairs, typewriting, reading, writing and "hand talking" in the various systems used by the blind, any many other scenes of remarkable interest.

WITH THE BOYS OF THE FIGURE TWO (April 5).—Showing many thrilling scenes of life on the West's largest horse ranch. Cowboys in their daredevil, break neck, sports and pastimes. If you liked life on the Diamond S Ranch, don't miss this.

MELIES.

WANTED—A WIFE (April 11).—Tired of leading the lonely bachelor life, Tom resolves to dispose of himself in wedlock, and, having no particular girl of his dreams, advertises for "a pretty wife."

Of more than a hundred responses from willing girls, old maids, grass-widows and otherwise, Tom chooses that of an orphan girl, twenty-two years old, signing herself "Mary Smith," and arranges to meet her on the arrival of the express in Range Town. A striped parasol is to be the mark of identification.

Unfortunately for Tom, his suddenly voluminous mail arouses the suspicion of the cowboys to the extent that they investigate and discover his secret intent. A dozen heads plot to play a joke on him. They hire an ugly cook to play the part of Mary Smith.

Tom engages a bridal suite at the hotel, and in his Sunday best, goes to meet his bride-to-be. His heart beats faster at sight of the striped parasol, but great expectations are quashed on discovery of the ugliness beneath it.

Meanwhile the boys have smuggled the real, pretty Mary Smith to the home of one of their married number and left her in care of the wife while they follow the fate of Tom. But Tom has already had enough of his supposed intended and makes his get-away at the first opportunity. Riding in the woods he meets with the real Mary, who, out for a walk, has sprained her ankle. He carries her to the house and learns the true story. Love is instantaneous and mutual, and the boys return to find the joke turned on themselves.

CINES.

OUT OF TUNE, (March 16).—Mr. Stout and his charming neighbor, the Widow Slattery, try to perform a duet, but judging from the awful expressions upon the usually smiling countenance of Mr. Stout, it is evident that the tones do not accord with his delicate sense of harmony.

Consequently, they part in anger, much to the distress of Mr. Stout's son and the widow's daughter. However, the young people cleverly exchange the music, and eliminating the discord, bring about a reconciliation of their parents. At the same time, they make the best of the opportunity for themselves to act in perfect harmony.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN IN ROME (March 16).—An extremely interesting topical subject showing the fine collection of lions, tigers, bears, seals, various birds and many rare specimens.

NAMING THE BABY (April 2).—Jones and his wife have their first quarrel over the momentous question, the baby's name. The altercation waxes more furious and finally Mrs. Jones, unable to stand it any longer cries out: "You're a monster, I shall go back to mother!"

Her parents do nothing at first but complicate matters, but finally the mother has a bright idea. She writes the following letter:

"Dear Children—You, my daughter, want to call the baby Anthony, your husband insists on calling it Mark. Let it be Mark Anthony and stop this fuss. "YOUR LOVING MOTHER."

The pair do exactly as they are told, and promise each other never to quarrel again.

ASSISSI, ITALY (April 2).—Picturing in an interesting manner a panorama of the town, the principal gate, many historic churches, the prison, and several famous castles.

LOVE AND HYPNOTISM (April 6).—Helen Thomas, a doctor's wife, meets the handsome Albert Barker at a social function, and acts in a manner to arouse her husband's jealousy.

The doctor suspects his wife of indiscretions, and determining to find out the truth of the matter, places Helen under a hypnotic spell, and forces her to rehearse before him the events of the preceding night.

His suspicions are not in any way allayed by the test, and in anger he turns her away from home.

However, the next day, he finds a letter addressed to Helen Thomas, and impulsively breaks the seal. Discovering through the letter his wife's innocence, he is heartbroken at his cruel action, and does not waste a moment until he clasps her in his arms once more.

BIOGRAPH.

OH, THOSE EYES! (April 1).—Gladys simply could not make her eyes behave, and whenever she flashed them on a member of the stronger sex, from that moment he was her abject slave. Her papa often reprimanded her for what he called flirting. But the poor girl could not help being vain of the power of her luminous orbs, and exercised this to the limit. However, when her father finds his clerks wildly fascinated, he decides to help them

THOSE HICKSVILLE BOYS (April 1).—Hank and Zeb do a vaudeville act at the Town Hall for the benefit of the new school house, and immediately the town tells them they are wasting their time in Hicksville; they should be on the stage. So they start out to become real actors. An interview with a city manager gets them a "tryout," and on the strength of this they telegraph home their "act is a hit." Their fate, however, is "the hook." A long walk home, lugging their trunk, is their task. Zeb enters an orchard to steal oranges, but is shot at. To make a get-away, he hides in the trunk. This move causes a lot of trouble for Hank.

THE PUNISHMENT (April 4).—The fruit grower's pretty daughter is insulted by the landowner's son, which insult is resented by a blow from Lucian, the girl's sweetheart. The little family feel that this episode wil cause their eviction, as the son is the ideal of his widowered father. The son reports the incident to his father and seeks vengeance, both going to the fruit-grower's cabin, but upon arriving there the father is deeply impressed by the girl, and later sends a letter, offering to marry her and give her parents full title to the grove, stipulating that the helper, her sweetheart, must go. Shortly after the marriage, the son, watching for a chance for vengeance, hides in a chest in her room in order to surprise her and Lucian, the latter having come to return her rosary, which he had found. The girl leaves the room for a moment and walks into her husband. Lucian, seeing him, escapes by the window. The husband brings her back into the room, and she, not knowing of Lucian's escape, is very agitated, arousing her husband's suspicions. He sees the chest lid move, and thinking she has her lover concealed, springs the lock and gives them both an hour to live. The landowner learns too late that in his efforts for vengeance he has caused the death of his own son.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, No. 13, (March 25).—New York, N. Y. Aviator Coffyn keeps the public on the qui vive with his sensational flights over the bay in his hydroplane, "The Canvas Back Duck."

Washington, D. C. The delegates from the Lawrence strikers appear before the Congressional Committee investigating labor conditions in the Committee Room in the House Office Building.

Liverpool, England. The Bayardo, the steamship cast upon the rocks in the recent gale, breaks amidships.

Moscow, Russia. The City Councilmen of Paris, on the hundredth anniversary of Napoleon's disastrous retreat from Moscow, visit the monument erected to those who perished on the march.

New York, N. Y. The police throw into the sea two miles east of the Sandy Hook Lightship, $10,500 worth of pistols, guns, knives, dirks, stilettoes and brass knuckles seized under the broad interpretation of the Sullivan Law against the possession of concealed weapons.

Le Ferrol, Spain. The King and Queen of Spain witness the launching of the first battleship of the new Spanish navy.

Mineola, N. Y. Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt is drawn for jury duty, attempts to serve and is peremptorily challenged by counsel for the N. Y. Central Railroad, defendants in a suit for $50,000.

El Paso, Tex. The revolutionists keep Juarez, Mexico, just across the river, in an uproar.

Hyde Park, N. Y. The 20th Century Limited, trying to make up lost time, hits a broken rail, and five cars crash through the ice into the river, injuring 26 passengers and crew.

TIGER'S CLAWS (April 3).—A hunter returned from his trip, finds himself at a house party. He loves his hostess's sister and she loves him and to complicate matters, another girl loves him also. By a carefully planned plot she attempts to compromise the sister and thus win the man for herself, but though she almost succeeds she is ultimately found out and sent away. Another fine American tale which shows up the villain in her true colors and proves that it doesn't pay after all to play a mean and contemptible act.

BRAVE HEART'S HIDDEN LOVE (April 1).—A little girl whose parents were killed by Indians grows up the adopted daughter of a white settler and the one Indian who lives in the same hut with him. They both love the girl dearly and finally, when an artist comes along with whom she falls in love and who ultimately takes her away to his Eastern home, Brave Heart is disconsolate and wanders along the banks of the stream carving the name of his sweetheart in the barks of the trees. A touching story of the prairie. Everyone will sympathize with the lonely Indian Brave Heart.

THE SINS OF THE FATHER (April 6).—The story is that of a youth who discovers that his father was a thief and that the father of his sweetheart served a term in jail for his own father's guilt. When his future father-in-law learns of it he is ordered from the house, but as he has made restitution to the man his father robbed, the latter calls on the man who has suffered for the crime of another and persuades him that the sins of the father should not be visited upon the children and all ends happily.

CLEMENCY OF ISABEAU (April 2).—This story hinges on the ancient right of a guest to protection in the house of his host or hostess if the guest be unwelcome. In this instance, Isabeau's only son had been killed in a duel, and the victor, pursued by Isabeau's henchmen, seeks refuge in flight and finds himself in the presence of Isabeau herself in the castle. She hides him and while he is hiding she learns that the man's victim is her son. Torn between conflicting emotions she finally decides not to violate the right of asylum and thus saves his life.

THE QUEEN'S NECKLACE (April 5).—This story, made famous by Dumas, is so well known as to need little description. The plot by which the countess and her husband endeavor to steal the magnificent diamond necklace the queen desired, but refused from the hands of her husband, and how the plot was discovered and foiled, and the ultimate punishment of the countess, makes a most dramatic and enthralling story, powerfully acted, beautifully staged and magnificently photographed.

NESTOR.

ROMANCE OF A GAMBLER (March 25).—Jim Carruthers, favorite nephew and legal heir to the vast estate of John Carruthers, his bachelor uncle, has gambling proclivities. The old man changes the terms of the will.

Ten thousand dollars in cash is duly marked for identification and sent to the erring one, with the stipulation that the same be returned intact at the end of one year from date of its receipt, otherwise the entire fortune shall go to charities. Previous to the receipt of the money and lawyer's advice, Carruthers meets Helen Murray, the daughter of a wealthy mine owner, returning from the East with her aunt chaperone, and young Gerald Gray.

Young Gray becomes the business manager for Murray's mining interests, is accepted as Helen's future husband and is honored and trusted. Secretly, however, the young lover has fallen into bad company and habits. He plays heavily and, led on by Jake Smith, a gambling crook, becomes deeply involved. He robs his benefactor and prospective father-in-law. It is here that the heart of the gambler, Carruthers, is revealed. He has long since learned of the hopelessness of his love for Helen, but in turn is devoted to her happiness. Threatened with exposure and in despair, Gray hastens from the gambling place to escape the shame of it by suicide. He is followed by Carruthers, who prevents the tragedy. Gerald then makes a clean breast of his guilt. Carruthers is shocked, leads him to his own cabin, makes him sign a confession of his deeds, also a pledge to forswear cards and drink, and to be to Helen a faithful husband, devoted to her honor and happiness. Unless Gray fulfills his pledge, Carruthers shall publish the confession of guilt. He gives Gerald the probation money, the return of which means his fortune, telling him to make good his defalcation.

Gerald Gray departs to start a better life and to fulfill his love's vows, while James Carruthers, having sacrificed fortune and lost his love's desire, remains alone with the memories of a brief dream of love's sweet song.

ACROSS THE SIERRAS (March 27).—Dan Harding, a miner, promises his wife that he will stop drinking. Little Elma, a tot of five years, loves her father's young friend, John Webster. That evening, despite his promise, Dan stops at the saloon and spends every penny of his week's wages. The wife and little Elma are waiting the father's return, when John comes past on his way home. He tells them that he believes Dan is working overtime. However, John goes straight to the saloon and, as he expected, finds Dan there with his empty pay envelope. He takes Dan to his own shack to sleep until he is sober, while he puts his own pay into Dan's envelope and hastens to the waiting wife. John has given the envelope to Dan's wife, telling her that her husband is still working, but sent home his pay. Dan, after having partly slept off the effects of the liquor, gets up and starts for home. When he arrives home, his wife is sewing, while John is asleep in his chair with the child. Dan sees the picture so, believing his friend in love with his wife and she with him, decides to go away and leave them to be happy. He slips out and writes a note, telling her that he is going away forever.

Twelve years later, we see Mrs. Dan Harding's new home across the Sierras, where she has taken her daughter. The mother has supported herself by sewing. John Webster has come to live not far from them, as he is working at the Dexter Mine. Little Elma's love for him has grown and they are now happily engaged. Dan Harding, in the meanwhile, has turned over a new page and is now the owner of the big Dexter Mine, although neither Mrs. Harding nor John knew of this.

Dan arrives to settle a strike at the mine, and there to his surprise, meets John. He learns the truth. It was the little daughter and not the mother that John loved. Dan is brought to Mrs. Harding. John is appointed Superintendent and a general reconciliation and forgiveness occurs.

THE BACHELOR AND THE BABY (March 30).—Roland Rosslyn, the bachelor, is not old as bachelors go. What is home without a wife? He casts longing glances in the direction of Eleanor Enomis. Eleanor knows her little book .and makes a grab for Roland. They become engaged.

It so happens that at the hotel, which the bachelor calls "home," comes Mrs. Fair, a fascinating young widow, her little baby and maid.

Roland calls on Eleanor for an auto ride. To his intense astonishment, he discovers the baby sound asleep on one of the limousine's seats; the widow's maid had placed it there by mistake. Eleanor promptly jumps at conclusions and accuses her fiance of being its father. The bachelor, not knowing what to do with the baby, takes it to his room

Meanwhile the baby's disappearance greatly upsets the widow. Hotel proprietor and detectives come to the rescue, but alas! despite their united and energetic efforts, baby cannot be found. Bachelor and baby get along famously until the latter's dinner hour arrives; then—well, then Roland is obliged to enlist someone's aid. This leads to the re-union of mother and child and later to the union of widow and bachelor. Baby will no longer be fatherless.

REPUBLIC.

TWO WOMEN (April 2).—Four prospecting miners while on the trail to the gold fields, stop and make a temporary camp. Jim Bonner, one of the miners, leaves the party to reconnoiter. He reaches the top of the hill, sees a prairie schooner in the distance and decides to learn the homesteaders' destination. Coming upon them, he finds that the party consists of Bob Slocum and his wife. The wife shows an interest in the stranger and he becomes infatuated with her.

Bonner finally confesses his love for Slocum's wife. Bonner learns that Slocum has become suspicious and decides upon leaving and taking Slocum's wife with him. He writes a letter which he attempts to hand to the wife, while Slocum's back is turned. Unfortunately Slocum has seen the action and forces his wife to give him the note, while Bonner is riding away. He becomes furious as he reads the contents and immediately sets out after Bonner. During the quarrel, Slocum's gun accidentaly is discharged and Bonner falls dead. Slocum continues his trip, during which his wife becomes ill and dies.

Fate takes Slocum to the Western town in which lives Bonner's widow and Slocum falls in love with her. He confesses to her that he killed a man. Slocum is startled to find that her husband is the man he shot. The widow thereupon rushes to the sheriff and informs him that she has a murderer in her home. When she returns to her home she finds Slocum still there and for the first time hears of her husband's deception. She throws the minions of the law off his track and follows him after the coast is clear. Fate plays a strange trick indeed in the lives of these two, who finally become mated after many adventures.

A DUAL PERSONALITY (April 6).—George Atwood is about to be married. On his way home after visiting his sweetheart, Alice, he falls and striking his head upon a rock, loses all recollection, forgets his name and becomes entirely another person. The day of the wedding arrives; guests have assembled; the minister is waiting and the bride and her mother are almost in hysterics. When all hope has been given up for the groom's appearance, the guests are dismissed and the tragic incident leaves an unhappy young woman mourning the loss of a sweetheart whose whereabouts are a mystery. In the meantime, the innocent cause of this tragedy is roaming the streets, not knowing who he is or where he belongs. He finally embarks on a vessel for Alaska, and enters the gold fields there, where he is successful. Meanwhile Alice cannot understand his disappearance and silence.

The mortgagee of the house in which Alice and her mother live, becomes infatuated with Alice's beauty and proceeds to make love to her. Alice does not favor him. Upon being rejected, he becomes ugly and threatens to foreclose the mortgage if Alice does not consent. George in his home in Alaska, meets with a second accident which has the effect of bringing hi mto a realization to his proper self. He does not understand the condition in which he finds himself, but all is explained to him by his partner in mining. George then explains to the latter that he should have been married to Alice and sends his partner to the post-office with a letter and instructions to enclose therein a certified check for a large sum of money. The letter explains everything to Alice and tells her to use the money in case she and her mother may be in need.

The letter arrives just as the Sheriff is about to take possession of the house and sell the contents. Alice stops the sale by paying the debt and leaving her mother in comfort goes to Alaska, where she finds George just recovering fully from the effects of the two accidents.

WHERE PATHS MEET (April 1).—Old Reuben Ward has a pretty daughter who helped him keep house by working behind a store counter. The girl had a young lover and their acquaintance had reached that stage when an engagement was entered into..

James Bright purchased the ring for his bride-to-be and made his way to Reuben's home for the purpose of presenting the ring to little Alice. The girl was not proof against flattery and earlier in the day had listened to the honeyed accents of a chance admirer who came to the store. She foolishly made an appointment with him for that evening. Probably she would not have kept the appointment, but her father and fiance fell to drinking. This disgusted the girl and she sought temporary relief from the alcoholic atmosphere, in the auto of her admirer.

From the automobile ride to the gilded glories of Broadway was an easy and logical step. As the girl entered on this path her lover chose a parallel path, with alcohol as the guide.

After a few months poor Alice, being cast off by her deceiver, penniless and faint staggers into a low saloon to obtain drink. She had not the money to pay for the spirits she ordered. She was insulted by one of the saloon loungers. There was a quparrel and a row and she was rescuer from further degradation by a man who was unrecognizable at first. It was her former lover, James Bright. So their paths had met in a low saloon and from practically the same causes.

But James Bright kept himself together and took the poor girl home to her father. He reproached the latter with the bad example he had set. The father then swore off from the temptations of alcohol in the future, and so with promise of a better life all three cast off their old habits and the story concludes with James Bright producing the wedding ring for his recovered bride-to-be.

THE DOVE AND THE SERPENT (April 4).—The story has tô do with the love adventures of a Mexican girl, Tortola, who chooses the less worthy of two suitors for her hand. The result is that she suffers the agony commonly ascribed to a dove, or similarly tempered bird or animal, who has the misfortune to fall into the hands of a serpent. The serpent in this case was Luis Arguello. Still her suffering, great as it was, did not end here. Her chosen lover, Luis, and Pablo, the man she unwisely rejected, are both in the toils of a seductive village "belle," for whose favor the men cut the cards. Luis wins the girl. In this, her great trial, Tortola returns to her father's home, a very bruised bird indeed.

She is then again taken to his heart and here Pablo brings by force the faithless lover, but the girl now knows him as he is, and refuses to marry him. The serpent, however, is indifferent to his fate. Being off with the old love, he concludes to be on with the new one, whom he has won by cards. But alas, on returning to claim his prize, he finds it is an inherently faithless one; she has made a new conquest, and has placed her affections accordingly.

Little Tortola is cured of h erinfatuation and this clears the path for her responding to the advances of the true lover, who, regardless of the past, loves her still, and to whom she is finally united. The story ends with Luis, the serpent, seated on a rock, with bowed head, deserted by all—a fate he richly deserves.

THE CHEF'S DOWNFALL (April 6).—Jacques Proudhon was an ambitious chef, who posed as a French Count, in order to obtain the hand of a rich girl, whose father had designs to obtain his daughter a tiltled husband.

Jacques carried the game through very well by the aid of a disguise and much effrontery, but he reckoned without his host. In his case his host was a fellow menial, a woman servant, with whom the chef had dallied, who at the psychological moment gave Jacques away. The disguise of the bogus Count was penetrated and justice was done.

A CHANGE OF STRIPES (April 6).—Young Mr. and Mrs. Crosby start out for a day's outing in their automobile. They had not proceeded far on the journey when much to their dismay their machine broke down for lack of fuel. While Arthur Crosby was absent endeavoring to find water for the car, an escaped convict appears and at the point of a pistol compels Mrs. Crosby to part with some of her external clothing to him. Enveloped in this he takes possession of the car and proceeds to enjoy a little ride on his own account.

Soon he encounter Arthur Crosby returning with the pail of water and again the convict's adroitness stands him in good stead. At the point of the pistol he obliges innocent Arthur to change suits with him and he then appears clothed in the garb of civilization, and best of all, in his pocket he finds Arthur's address cards and the keys of his house, to which the convict instantly repairs.

Meanwhile a reward for the capture of an escaped convict has been publicly posted in the city and poor Arthur wearing the suit of one is in danger of arrest and immurement in prison, until he explains the tragic circumstance in which he finds himself placed.

The convict was hungry and virtually without money, for Arthur had carried little in his clothing; so when he finds himself in Arthur's house his first act was to make up a package of food and silverware, and then to spy out the land with a view to securing more bounty on his return. But his opportunity and liberty were to be of short duration, for Arthur accompanied by his friend and some police, jump into an auto and race for the house, arriving just in time to effect the recapture of the convict.

MAJESTIC.

THE LIGHTED CANDLE (Mar. 31).—John Bennet is engaged in the business of manufacturing explosives. He needs more money to extend his business and he seeks financial aid of Wm. Stone. Mr. Stone advances him the required amount, but exacts a bill of sale of the business in case of the non-payment of the loan.

John Bennet has a niece about five years old, with whom Mr. Stone and his daughter Edith are fascinated. Through this friendship for the child a stronger friendship is springing up between John and Edith.

When the note is due, John finds himself unable to pay the full amount and approaches Mr. Stone for an extension of time. This is refused. John tells his sister and she sacrifices the family jewels for the raising of the money. John at once proceeds to the office of the financier, Mr. Stone, and pays this money and receives a receipt. The clerk credits the money to the wrong account.

John takes his receipt back to his own office, where his little niece is playing on the floor with a doll given to her by Edith Stone. Bennet opens his safe and taking out his receipt file, opens it and places the receipt just obtained in the box, but his attention is distracted at this moment by the foreman of his factory, who comes in and speaks to him and a draught from the window blows the receipt out of the box and it falls on the floor, where his little niece is playing. She takes up the receipt and uses it for a curl paper for her doll's hair. John having finished talking to the foreman, turns, locks the box and puts it back in the safe, knowing nothing of the loss of the receipt.

John then notices his little niece playing with the doll, and knowing she obtained this doll from Edith, he takes it from her and throws it up on top of the safe and tells the child to go home, not wishing her to receive any presents from either Mr. Stone or his family. Later Mr. Stone brings the sheriff to the factory to take possession on account of the non-payment of the note. John at once claims that he has paid the money, goes to the safe, gets out the box to show them the receipt, and of course he cannot find it, with the result that the law compels him to give up his business.

John determines that another man shall not profit by the foreclosure. He lights a candle and places it in the magazine room. He returns to his home to be told by his sister that Edith Stone has called upon his little niece, found her crying because of the loss of her doll, and learning that it had been left at the office of the powder mill, volunteers to go back with her and get it, and accompanied by Mr. Stone, who was with Edith, they do so.

John realizes the peril of his little niece and also realizes that it will mean not only Stone's death, but also Edith's. He reaches the factory just as the wick is burning down to the explosive, while in the office his little niece, laughingly undoing her doll's curl papers, finds and shows to Edith and Stone a paper which they realize is the lost receipt. John stumbles in from the magazine room to be met by the news of the recovery of the receipt and Stone's apology and reparation for the error of his careless clerk. Edith also offers reparation of a still more gratifying nature to the happy John.

KEEP QUIET (April 2).—James Carson is annoyed by the cook by her loud singing. Unable to sleep, he arises in a rage and descends to the dining-room and discharges Mary. It so happens that Mary's mother and father bring back the weekly wash about this time, so Bridget, Mary's mother, proposes that she take Mary's place. Not being deaf and dumb she promises Mrs. Carson to assume those infirmities and is at once installed as the deaf and dumb cook, and Mary departs with her father, who is an iceman.

In the meantime, James has gone to an employment agency and secures a Chinaman, who passes himself off as deaf and dumb. Upon returning home with John the Chinaman finds that John's wife has engaged a servant.

The Irish and Chinese combination don't get along well and create a lot of disturbance which finally ends with Bridget throwing a custard pie in John's face. The much disturbed Mr. Carson and his frau rush into the kitchen and separate the combatants. James Carson takes John to another room, while Bridget is left alone in the kitchen with Mrs. Carson and explains to her what has happened. Mr. Carson, by chance, overhears this and thus becomes aware of the conceit being practiced in regard to Bridget being deaf and dumb. Thinking he will get even with his wife, he proposes to John that he make love to Bridget and get her so wrought up that she will finally speak and show the deception. This John at once proceeds to do, but unfortunately for him, just as he has Bridget in a fond embrace, her husband, the iceman, enters with a cake of ice. Misconstruing the situation, the iceman at once begins to chastise John, and John manages to escape with his life by the intervention of Mr. Carson and his wife.

Explanations follow and Bridget and John are sent on their way. It happens at this moment that Mary, their former musical cook, returns for some of her belongings and she is eagerly grabbed by James Carson and reinstalled as Queen of the Kitchen.

The next morning finds Mary again lighting the fire and making coffee to musical accompaniments. James Carson rises from his pillow, at first much disturbed at being aroused, but remembering his previous day's experience with the "so-called" deaf and dumb servants he congratulates himself upon being so lucky and sinks back with a contented smile.

GREAT NORTHERN.

YOUNG WOMEN'S PROTECTIVE SOCIETY (March 30).—Ella Merry loves Mr. Loveland, a magistrate, but cannot get her father to smile with favor upon her lover's suit. Soon after, Mr. Merry receives a letter from an actress asking him to take her to his country residence. He does so, and soon the two are enjoying an hour's courting. Meanwhile Mrs. Merry has learned of her husband's escapade and that he is not, as he led her to believe, holding a meeting for the Protection of Young Women. She hastens to the summer residence, but is forestalled by three tramps. The latter are just facing Mr. Merry's revolver when news is brought that Mrs. Merry is coming. The tramps are forced to each seize a bundle of papers, the actress gets out of sight, so that when Mrs. Merry appears, it is to find a meeting for the Society for the Protection of Young Women in progress. She withdraws, when Mr. Merry finds that one of the tramps has got the revolver, and he has to pay for the men to keep silence. He is just "cleaned out" when the police raid the house and drag them all off to the police court. Here, all except Mr. Merry, are remanded, while Mr. Loveland, for he is the magistrate, concludes a bargain with Mr. Merry, whereby all are satisfied.

KID CANFIELD (2 Reels, April 1).—Learning the gambler's art as a boy, Kid Canfield practiced it on his younger brother and sister. This aroused his father to a righteous indignation, the culmination of which was the driving of the boy out into the world. He started his career in a Western town, using his art with such adeptness as to make his reputation as a card shark and monteman, notorious throughout that section. Ten years later, he bloomed forth as the keeper of one of the most widely known gambling dens in the country.

The paraphernalia in evidence in this haunt of vice exerted its fascination on the youth and the adult alike, drawing them to the consuming flame of their own destruction. Into this mad vortex of the human passions came a youth. He was clever, and luck was with him; then the Kid marked him as a victim. We behold the hellish apparatus secretly prepared, and we see the fiendish operations carried out to their horrible conclusion. Black despair overtakes the miserable youth, and self-destruction is the penalty he pays for his folly.

Clutched in the hand of the lifeless victim was a photograph. Canfield loosened the fingers of the dead youth; but his eyes falling on the picture bulged without horror. The face was that of his mother! The boy, cold and stiff, whose young life was blasted out so cruelly, was his own brother! Recovering from the terrible realization that he was, indeed, a fratricide, the notorious Canfield registered a solemn oath before high heaven to forsake his evil ways and devote his entire life to the reclamation of the youth of the land he had corrupted.

Thus comes the grand final to this o'er true tale. Here we behold, in the second reel, the exposition and correct manner of manipulation of the various devices used by the gambling profession. This is a most fascinating part of the subject, morally, educational and instructive, in the sense of telling us and warning us of the pitfalls and slimy traps of the gilded dens of vice which abound around us.

THE DIVORCE CURE (April 3).—A young couple who are childless, growing weary of one another, decide to separate through the medium of the divorce mill. Through the good offices of a lawyer and doctor, a plan is set on foot to bring about a happy reconciliation. The plan was original, striking and remarkably successful. The unhappy wife is induced to adopt a friendless orphan child. This little innocent creeps into the heart of the woman and her husband. A new and greater love springs up between them, with the result that God blesses their union and sends them a little cherub of their own.

REX.

LOVE'S FOUR STONE WALLS (March 28).—He loved, and was loved by the girl—but her father was a broker, and Wall Street has its own patented way of supplying the climax for a romance. Wall Street consummated her father's downfall, and in despair he realized that he had but one means to survive the blow, to borrow sufficient money from his banker to hush the stentorian voice of Debt.

The banker loved the girl, too. So he offered to lend the money if he could marry the girl, and the father, not knowing the girl's heart and the love it sheltered—took the money. The girl was told; she looked over the yawning chasm of impending poverty, and saw the darkness in the depths; she saw the death of her father's honor, and the ghost of his respect among men—so she promised to marry the man. Perhaps the banker didn't know she loved another; perhaps he did.

The other tried to forget, and forgot everything but her.

So when her husband advertised for a secretary he applied, and got the position. And she saw him, and looked upon his face, and into his heart, and saw there written the reason for his coming.

It happened a few days later. That agent of Fate, Impulse, led his feet into her room, compelled his arms to draw her to himself, urged his lips to find hers; and then, the agent's work accomplished, Fate herself stepped in, bringing the husband with her. In a flash it occurred to him; to save the woman's honor and preserve her secret he snatched the pearls from her neck and stood before them a confessed thief. Four stone walls, in a prison built by love!

THE LIGHT OF THE WAY (March 31).—There was Mikey O'Donovan, whose stubby little hands were always shoved way down into the pockets of his tattered trousers, with that defiant air which made patent the fact that he would one day be a policeman; here was Gretchen Miller, whose golden

The MOTIOGRAPH

What is the reason of that mysterious enthusiasm which makes every one speak in high praise of the MOTIOGRAPH?

What peculiar qualities does it possess, which impel the exhibitor to dismiss the suggestion that others are "as good"?

We can trace the cause by taking, as an example, one little fact: Every part and every screw is interchangeable with every other part and every other screw.

Accurate dimensions in MOTIOGRAPH parts means elimination of friction and extraordinary ease of operation---besides assuring freedom from worry and "up-keep" expense.

hair and creamy skin were the envy of the other feminine members of the class and the objects of wholesale admiration from the male contingent, and little Mary Burke, the cripple, in whose wistful tiny face one could read the story of suffering and the record of stoic courage, and through whose eyes, despite her affliction, shone the sunbeam reflection of a happy soul; and there was Abie Rabinowitz, who always illustrated his mathematical problems by such objects as coats, trousers and suspenders, and who predicted every fire in the neighborhood by at least a week; and thin Annie Brown, who looked as though she was always cold and always hungry because she was. And Marion Leonard—who it isn't necessary to explain was the teacher of this group of children of the tenements—loved them, loved them with a mother-love and a sister-love, and the warm love of suffering humankind.

When their mouths hungered, she gave them food. When they were ill and their parents' destitution too great to help pay the doctor's rent, she brought the doctor and bought the medicine. The kids were her life, and the school room her world.

Miss Leonard couldn't pay her rent. The landlady called and stated her wrongs to the principal, and Miss Leonard was told to go. It broke her heart to leave those she loved, and it nearly killed her. She stretched forth her arms to the empty seats, and her soul spoke to the souls of the absent children.

The next morning the kids found that the world was a dark and dreary void. They went to the principal, and with warm tears in their eyes begged to have their savior back. They told him all she had done for them—and the principal understood. And the kids went back to their room with joy in their hearts and Miss Leonard in their midst.

POWERS

THE JOY RIDE (April 2).—Mary was possessed by one idea; she longed to pose as a lady. Unfortunately for Mary, she was only Mrs. Tadbury's maid of all work and therefore her ambition seemed hopeless.

Finally, however, the opportunity unfolded itself for the maid to impersonate her mistress and Mary was not one bit slow in grasping it. She took quite a little social whirl, went on a joy ride with a wealthy clubman and succeeded in weaving a web of circumstantial evidence around poor Mrs. Tadbury, that came nearly causing a divorce suit in the Tadbury household. The wealthy clubman, Charles Webb, also came in for his share of trouble, receiving some very rough treatment at the hands of the irate Mr. Tadbury. Mary came to grief, at last, and realized the full meaning of the text, "Pride goeth before a fall and vanity before destruction."

THE NEW VILLAGE DOCTOR (April 6).—Young Dr. Dana is crossed in love, or believes he is, which is much the same thing, and like many bereaved lovers, flees from the scene of his disappointment, without bidding his beloved Ethel farewell. Taking up a practice in a small town, his handsome face and dashing manner soon cause him to become the object of general attraction for all the pretty girls in the village. A group of these girls finally band themselves together for the purpose of forming his acquaintance. Their many and unique methods of accomplishing their purpose are, one after another, frustrated either by chance or the obtuseness of Dr. Dana, until the girls are finally reduced to despair. It is then that Ethel, unaware that the doctor has located in that village, visits there as the guest of a former schoolmate, who is also one of the doctor's most ardent admirers. Ethel joins the band without learning the doctor's identity, nor is the doctor aware of her presence. This state of affairs leads to complications that require the hand of Cupid, assisted by a course of the doctor's most severe treatment, to straighten out.

THANHOUSER.

THE STAR OF THE SIDE SHOW (April 2).—Her parents were humble peasants, and were fond of her when she was a baby, for they believed she would grow up to be a beautiful woman and make a good match. The trouble was that she didn't grow up. When she was nineteen she was no bigger than a child of six.

Naturally they were overjoyed when an offer for their daughter's hand was made by another midget who lived in the same village. To their astonishment and anger, the girl refused to entertain it, declaring the husband she chose would have to be a man of whom she could be proud.

Her home life was most unhappy after that, and the entire family rejoiced when a showman from the United States arrived and offered what seemed big money if she would join his "Congress of Freaks," which was quite an institution in America. And the girl went gladly.

In her strange new life, she found many things to wonder at, and one object to admire, to wit: the biggest giant she had ever dreamed of. Naturally she fell deeply in love with him, but he never even suspected it. The reason was that his giantly affections were all expended on the glorious snake charmer, whom he hoped to make his bride some day.

The midget, who thought her affections were returned, was disillusioned, and her romance shattered. Then the little man from across the sea crossed to America, and renewed his suit. She was won by his devotion, and accepted him.

THE GIRL OF THE GROVE (April 5).—The girl was young, pretty, and also a good business woman. When her father died she took up the reins of management and ran an orange grove with successful results.

Her capable hands were so busy that she had no time to think of love. One day, however, "the prince" appeared. He was a tourist from the North. It was love at first sight on both sides.

Then the awakening came. She learned that the man had a wife, an invalid and cripple. The man did not tell her, the news was broken to her by accident. Life had become bitter to her, and in a moment of weakness she decided to end it all, and wandered down to the sea.

Looking around to note if she was observed, she was just in time to see another woman leap overboard. The girl forgot her own troubles, jumped into the water, and saved the unfortunate. After she had brought her ashore and revived her, she recognized the unhappy one as the wife of the man.

The wife did not know her rescuer, but in gratitude told her story, of physical suffering, of neglect and coldness.

The self-reliant girl pitied the poor weak woman, and induced her to make her home with her. There later the girl received a letter from the man, telling of the death of "a rich relative" which, he explained, made their marriage possible. He added that he would call that afternoon to discuss the date of their marriage.

The man was promptly on hand. The girl met him, and led him through the grove to the house. Then she stepped aside and pointed to a woman asleep in an invalid's chair. The man looked and recognized his wife.

"I saved her life," the girl whispered. "Your neglect and brutality drove her to attempt suicide. Go, and never return."

The man made no comment, but departed. The wife awoke and sleepily asked the girl if they had had a visitor.

"No one that either of us know or ever will know," was the reply. "Go to sleep again."

The wife dozed off again while the girl watched her.

SOLAX.

THE WITCH'S NECKLACE (April 3).—A touring party composed of wealthy people explore the beautiful country around the world-famous Garden of the Gods, Colorado. They use pack mules, donkeys and other accessories. After visiting all the wonderful places in the neighborhood, including the Balanced Rock, and the canyons, the guide leads the party to a witch's cave. The witch has a weird-looking abode, the sight of which instills the feminine contingent of the party with shrinking terror.

Several of the women in the party are not afraid however. One has her fortune told and another of the party developed a liking for a mysterious-looking necklace which the witch has suspended from the neck of an oriental God. The girl determines to purchase the necklace, but her father wouldn't have it. The girl is piqued and sulky. When the explorers proceed she runs off and manifests her displeasure by spending the rest of the afternoon alone reading a novel.

She falls into a trance and imagines that the witch has presented her with the mysterious necklace. As soon as she puts it around her neck she is guided by an irresistible force into wild and unknown regions. She wanders on and on and on, aimlessly and without direction. When almost dying with exhaustion, she is awakened by a member of the party and told that the expedition is about to move on to the next town.

BILLY'S TROUBLESOME GRIP (April 5).—Billy Quirk starts out in the morning for his office. Billy has important papers in his grip and important matters on his mind. The trouble starts when Billy takes a car and in his hurry, when he reaches his destination, he grabs up a grip similar to his, but which happens to belong to a woman of an unknown temper and unsympathetic nature. When Billy discovers to his horrow that his grip, instead of containing valuable papers, contains lingerie and false hair, he nearly collapses.

In his confusion, before risking detection by his wife, Billy tries to get rid of the grip. In the meanwhile, Mrs. Uneven Temper discovers her loss and goes with clenched fists for the mere man who presumed to rob her of her appendages and rightful possessions. Naturally, when Greek meets Greek there is a tug of war. This refers to Billy's wife and Mrs. Uneven Temper. Billy, however, is not Greek. He ran for dear life and in doing so complicated things still more.

GAUMONT.

CALINO AS MASON (April 2).—Calino receives a contract to build a home after his own fashion. His ideas are notedly eccentric, so consequently the building. To begin with it is ominously unstable, which makes moving in particularly difficult. It is only accomplished after many a tumble of both family, moving men and furniture. Then, too, the carpenter failed to nail down the floor boards. The plumber did his work in perverted fashion. The gas fitter allowed ample room for an explosion and even the gentlest of zephyrs proved too overwhelmingly strenuous for the rocking edifice.

AUNT AURORA (April 2).—Uncle Adolph could be very happy with his two young comely nieces, if they but made their eyes behave. Alas the flirtations that they carried on whenever he relaxed in his vigil were such as proved a continuous source of annoyance. Things got so exasperating that poor Uncle Adolph began to look around for a female chaperon for the two jolly tho naughty girlies. One night the gentleman-oglers became so bold as to serenade the nieces much to Uncle's chagrin. That was plenty. A chaperon must be engaged—but who? An ingenious moment, suggested his sister-in-law, Aurora, whom he had not seen for more than twenty-five years. She was written to and on she came. But what a surprise to Uncle Adolph—instead of securing the aid of a typical spinster for the office, he found that he had brought a merry, yes flirtatious relative into his midst. Of course the girls were never checked in their flirtations and Auntie even encouraged them in their amusement of this variety, with the result that Uncle Adolph, so deluged with relatives of this kind, was finally forced to change his views and give his sanction.

THE MARGRAVE'S DAUGHTER (April 6).—"The Margrave's Daughter" reveals the story of a young girl whose love for a nobleman is strenuously opposed by her father, the margrave, a title of nobility corresponding to the French marquis. The two lovers, despite the father's disapproval, attempt to elope from the castle, only to be frustrated at the postern portal. The lover, after a combat with the margrave's knights on the bridge crossing the moat, is finally captured and condemned to decapitation after being adjudged guilty of treason. On the day of the execution the nobleman and his father confessor are slowly led to the platform where the executioners, with their axes and the death block, are awaiting. The margrave, his courtiers and their retinues are in the box overhead prepared to witness the young nobleman's death. A surprise is in store when the priest and the proscribed one reveal their identity, the priest as the young lover, the doomed martyr as the margrave's daughter, she having changed clothes with her lover quite unknown to all. The margrave is baffled as they embracingly kneel side by side and lay their heads on the block together. The stay of execution is ordered and instead the ardent couple is proclaimed man and wife.

LUX.

OH! LISTEN TO THE BAND (March 28).—The leader of the Blue Hungarian Band is about to be married, and invites all the members of his band to attend the ceremony. The band turns up to a man but leaves their instruments at home. As the instruments also desire to be present at the ceremony they march off in single file. Their passage through the streets is highly amusing. When the bandsmen decide to have a tune, by the way of celebrating, they find that their instruments have wandered off. Sitting down in despair, the bandsmen realize how much they love their instruments, but it all ends happily when the cornet, the trombone, the drum, the big drum, and the flute come trooping back with a host more of their comrades.

BILL BECOMES A FAVORITE WITH THE LADIES (March 29).—A Billesque, showing the amusing efforts of "Merry William" to win the affections of his ladylove. She shuns him. He seeks the magic spell, and through the misuse of same brings the affections of nearly every other lady tumbling around his little heart. The magic spell consists of burning a lock of the lady's hair. Well, how was a poor, innocent little male thing, like Bill, to know that a lady's hair is not always "Home-Grown."?

CELL THIRTEEN (In three reels)—(April 8).—Dr. Russell, a specialist on diseases of the brain, is traveling with his young wife and stays for a few days at a fashionable hotel where the guests are given to merriment. There the wife meets one Marius, a polished man of the world, who is immediately smitten with the charms of the wife. She is not averse to a flirtation and at a ball they meet in a clandestine manner and Marius wins the woman.

Dr. Russell is summoned home, but his wife finds an opportunity to communicate with Marius and invites him to call on her in a secret manner. Dr. Russell returns to his home, which is a private sanitarium for the treatment of the insane. His wife has arranged with Marius to effect an entrance into the home by waving a lamp as a signal that the coast is clear. Marius arrives during the absence of the physician, sees the prearranged signal and enters the house, which is in darkness. He is groping about trying to find the woman when the husband unexpectedly returns home with a madman. Fearful of being discovered, Marius seeks concealment in a cell, which is numbered 13. The wife is unaware of his presence in the house. Dr. Russell and his assistants place the lunatic in the same cell. Marius tries to make his escape, but finds the door locked. The insane man is awakened and he grapples with the intruder and a fierce fight ensues, in which Marius is borne to the floor and throttled. The noise of the struggle reaches Dr. Russell's ears and he goes, with a helper, and rescues Marius. The latter has been made insane from fright and he partially recognizes the wife and hands her the letter she has written him. The physician obtains the letter and learns of the infidelity of his wife.

Sterling Carbon Holders

AT LAST

A REAL CARBON HOLDER

Just the one YOU have been longing and waiting for.
A holder that will grip the Carbons perfectly tight whether stone cold or at a red heat.

A HOLDER that is Extra Heavy, in which the clamping bar is parallel to the main body of the holder thereby preventing the bending of the four wing clamping screw which is also of extra large diameter. This bar is held in position by a projection extending through a recess in the bar. A pin extending through the clamping screw automatically opens holder when this screw is loosened to insert carbons.

A long, heavy extension with large thumb screw for wire connection. Special Lava insulating bushings which positively prevent short circuiting, etc.; etc.

Price $3.50 per pair sent prepaid

If you are using other than ⅝ inch carbons kindly advise size.
Live dealers wanted everywhere.

Notice to Manufacturers of Moving Pictures

AT the annual convention of the "National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees" held in Niagara Falls, N. Y., during July, 1911, a resolution was adopted instructing their executive board to communicate with the manufacturers of moving pictures and respectfully request that members of the I. A. T. S. E. be employed to construct all scenery, scenic effects, properties, etc., and the setting thereof, used in the production of moving pictures.

By the employment of members of the I. A. T. S. E. you are assured of the very highest class of skilled workmanship in all lines of construction. This, in conjunction with the fact that your film is being projected by operators, members of the I. A. T. S. E., should doubly assure its perfection, on completion and exhibition on the screen.

Capable men in all branches will be furnished upon application to our offices or our representative will call at your request.

Respectfully,
Jos. L. Meeker, Cor. Sec.,

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts ⅔ from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for ⅔ more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism and revision for a fee of only $2.

REVISION—Scenarios having a reasonable chance of a sale will be edited and revised and a typewritten copy supplied for one dollar per finished page. Send the manuscript and a reading fee of one dollar. If the scenario will not warrant further expense, it will be returned to you; if it does, you will be advised as to full cost. Please note that this covers no criticism.

Exhibitors!

Submit your difficulties to the author of "The Photoplay Theater," and other articles on management, for advice and suggestion, the result of twenty years' experience in amusement enterprises. Simple questions $1 each.

THEY MEET JOHN SCOTT, A GALLANT WOODMAN

A MAN WORTH WHILE

Coming into a large estate, Ann Worth is so besieged by fortune seekers that she decides to go West in search of a Man Worth While. To disguise her purpose, she takes a position as governess to a ranch owner's daughter, and in this capacity meets Scott, a neighboring woodman, who proves his worthiness at a most unexpected but needful moment by saving her's and others' lives at the risk of his own. Ann accepts his proposal, and not until after the marriage does Scott learn that his wife has "stooped to conquer."
